CHRONOLOGY OF SOVEREIGNS MENTIONED IN THE KOJIKI AND NIHONGI

INTRODUCTION

Of all the mass of Japanese literature, which lies before us as the result of nearly twelve centuries of book-making, the most important Monument is the work entitled "Ko-ji-ki"¹ or "Records of Ancient Matters," which was completed in A. D. 712. It is the most important because it has preserved for us more faithfully than any other book the mythology, the manners, the language, and the traditional history of Ancient Japan. Indeed it is the earliest authentic connected literary product of that large division of the human race which, has been variously denominated Turanian, Scythian and Altaic, and it even precedes by at least a century the most ancient extant literary compositions of non-Aryan India. Soon after the date of its compilation, most of the salient features of distinctive Japanese nationality were buried under a superincumbent mass of Chinese culture, and it is to these "Records" and to a very small number of other ancient works, such as the poems of the "Collection of a Myriad Leaves" and the Shintō Rituals, that the investigator must look, if he would not at every step be misled in attributing originality to modern customs and ideas, which have simply been borrowed wholesale from the neighbouring continent.

It is of course not pretended that even these "Records" are untouched by Chinese influence: that influence is patent in the very characters with which the text is written. But the influence is less, and of another kind. If in the traditions preserved and in the customs alluded to we detect the Early Japanese in the act of borrowing from China and perhaps even from India, there is at least on our author's part no ostentatious decking out in Chinese trappings of what he believed to be original matter, after the fashion of the writers who immediately succeeded him. It is true that this abstinence on his part makes his compilation less pleasant to the ordinary native taste than that of subsequent historians, who put fine Chinese phrases into the mouths of emperors and heroes supposed to have lived before the time when intercourse with China began. But the European student, who reads all such books, not as a pastime but in order to search for facts, will prefer the more genuine composition. It is also accorded the first place by the most learned of the native literati.

Of late years this paramount importance of the "Records of Ancient Matters" to investigators of Japanese subjects generally has become well-known to European scholars; and even versions of a few passages are to be found scattered through the pages of their writings. Thus Mr. Aston has given us, in the Chrestomathy appended to his "Grammar of the Japanese Written Language," a couple of interesting extracts; Mr. Satow has illustrated by occasional extracts his elaborate papers on the Shintō Rituals printed in these "Transactions," and a remarkable essay by Mr. Kempermann published in the Fourth Number of the "Mittheilungen der Deutschen Gesellschaft für Natur und Völkerkunde Ostasiens," though containing no actual translations, bases on the account given in the "Records" some conjectures regarding the origines of Japanese civilization which are fully substantiated by more minute research. All that has yet appeared in any European language does not, however, amount to one-twentieth part of the whole, and the most erroneous views of the style and scope of the book and its contents have found their way into popular works on Japan. It is hoped that the true nature of the book, and also the true nature of the traditions, customs, and ideas of the Early Japanese, will be made clearer by the present translation the object of which is to give the entire work in a continuous English version, and thus to furnish the European student with a text to quote from, or at least to use as a guide in consulting the original. The only object aimed at has been a rigid and literal conformity with the Japanese text. Fortunately for this endeavour (though less fortunately for the student), one of the difficulties which often beset the translator of an Oriental classic is absent in the present case. There is no beauty of style, to preserve some trace of which he may be tempted to sacrifice a certain amount of accuracy. The "Records" sound queer and bald in Japanese, as will be noticed further on, and it is therefore right, even from a stylistic point of view, that they should sound bald and queer in English. The only portions of the text which, from obvious reasons, refuse to lend themselves to translation into English after this fashion are the indecent portions. But it has been thought that there could be no objection to rendering them into Latin,—Latin as rigidly literal as is the English of the greater part.

After these preliminary remarks, it will be most convenient to take the several points which a study of the "Records" and the turning of them into English suggest, and to consider the same one by one. These points are:

- I.—Authenticity and Nature of the Text, together with Bibliographical Notes.
 - II.—Details concerning the Method of Translation.
 - III.—The "Nihon-Gi" or "Chronicles of Japan"
 - IV.—Manners and Customs of the Early Japanese.
 - V.—Religious and Political Ideas of the Early Japanese.
- Beginnings of the Japanese Nation, and Credibility of the National Traditions.

I. THE TEXT AND ITS AUTHENTICITY, TOGETHER WITH BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTES.

The latter portion of the Preface to the "Records of Ancient Matters" is the only documentary authority for the origin of the work. It likewise explains its scope. But though in so doing the author descends to a more matter of fact style than the high-sounding Chinese phrases and elaborate allusions with which he had set forth, still his meaning may be found to lack somewhat of clearness, and it will be as well to have the facts put into language more intelligible to the European student. This having already been done by Mr. Satow in his paper on the "Revival of Pure Shintō," ² it will be best simply to quote his words. They are as follows: "The Emperor Temmu, at what portion of his reign is not mentioned, lamenting that the records possessed by the chief families contained many errors, resolved to take steps to preserve the true traditions from oblivion. He therefore had the records carefully examined, compared, and weeded of their faults. There happened to be in his household a person of marvellous memory named Hiyeda no Are, who could repeat without mistake the contents of any document he had ever seen, and never forgot anything that he had heard. Temmu Tennō ³ took the pains to instruct this person in the genuine traditions and 'old language of former ages,' and to make him repeat them until he had the whole by heart. 'Before the undertaking was completed,' which probably means before it could be committed to writing, the Emperor died, and for twenty-five years Are's memory was the sole depository of what afterwards received the title of Kojiki ⁴ or Furu-koto-bumi as it is read by Motoori. At the end of this interval the Empress Gemmiō ordered Yasumaro to write it down from the mouth of Are, which accounts for the completion of the manuscript in so short a time as four months and a half. Are's age at this date is not stated, but as he was twenty-eight years of age some time in the reign of Temmu Tennō, it could not possibly have been more than sixty-eight, while taking into account the previous order of Temmu Tennō in 681 for the compilation of a history, and the statement that he was engaged on the composition of the Kojiki at the time of his death in 686, it would not be unreasonable to conclude that it belongs to about the last year of his reign, in which case Are was only fifty-three in 711."

The previous order of the Emperor Temmu mentioned in the above extract is usually supposed to have resulted in the compilation of a history which was early lost. But Hirata gives reasons for supposing that this and the project of the "Records of Ancient Matters" were identical. If this opinion be accepted, the "Records," while the oldest existing Japanese book, are, not the third, but the second historical work of which mention has been preserved, one such having been compiled in the year 620, but lost in a fire in the year 645. It will thus be seen that it is rather hard to say whom we should designate as the author of the work. The Emperor Tem-mu, Hiyeda no Are, Yasumaro may all three lay claim to the title. The question, however, is of no importance to us, and the share taken by Are may well have been exaggerated in the telling. What seems to remain as the residue of fact is that the plan of a purely national history originated with the Emperor Temmu and was finally carried out under his successor by Yasumaro, one of the Court Nobles.

² Published in Vol. iii, Pt. I, of these "Transactions."

³ I.e., the Emperor Tem-mu.

Fuller evidence and confirmatory evidence from other sources as to the origin of our "Records" would doubtless be very acceptable. But the very small number of readers and writers at that early date, and the almost simultaneous compilation of a history (the "Chronicles of Japan") which was better calculated to bit the taste of the age, make the absence of such evidence almost unavoidable. In any case, and only noticing in passing the fact that Japan was never till quite recent years noted for such wholesale literary forgeries (for Motowori's condemnation of the "Chronicles of Old Matters of Former Ages" has been considered rash by later scholars),—it cannot be too much emphasized that in this instance authenticity is sufficiently proved by internal evidence. It is hard to believe that any forger living later than the eighth century of our era should have been so well able to discard the Chinese "padding" to the old traditions, which after the acceptance by the Court of the "Chronicles of Japan," had come to be generally regarded as an integral portion of those very traditions; and it is more unlikely still that he should have invented a style so little calculated to bring his handiwork into repute. He would either have written in fair Chinese, like the mass of early Japanese prose writers (and his Preface shows that he could do so if he were so minded); or, if the tradition of there having been a history written in the native tongue had reached him, he would have made his composition unmistakably Japanese in form by arranging consistent use of characters employed phonetically to denote particles and terminations, after the fashion followed in the Rituals, and developed (apparently before the close of the ninth century) into what is technically known as the "Mixed Phonetic Style" (Kana-mazhiri), which has remained ever since as the most convenient vehicle for writing the language. As it is, his quasi-Chinese construction, which breaks down every now and then to be helped up again by a few Japanese words written phonetically, is surely the first clumsy attempt at combining two divergent elements. What however is simply incredible is that, if the supposed forger lived even only a hundred years later than A.D. 712, he should so well have imitated or divined the archaisms of that early period. For the eighth century of our era was a great turning point in the Japanese language, the Archaic Dialect being then replaced by the Classical; and as the Chinese language and literature were alone thenceforward considered worthy the student's attention, there was no means of keeping up an acquaintance with the diction of earlier reigns, neither do we find the poets of the time ever attempting to adorn their verse with obsolete phraseology. That was an affectation reserved for a later epoch, when the diffusion of books rendered it possible. The poets of the seventh, eighth. and ninth centuries apparently wrote as they spoke; and the test of language alone would almost allow of our arranging their compositions half century by half century, even without the dates which are given in many instances in the "Collection of a Myriad Leaves" and in the "Collection of Songs Ancient and Modern,"—the first two collections of poems published by imperial decree in the middle of the eighth, and at the commencement of the tenth, century respectively.

The above remarks are meant to apply more especially to the occasional Japanese words,—all of them Archaic,—which, as mentioned above, are used from time to time in the prose text of the "Records," to help out the author's meaning and to preserve names whose exact pronunciation he wished handed down. That he should have invented the Songs would be too monstrous a supposition for any one to entertain, even if we had not many of the same and other similar ones preserved in the pages of the "Chronicles of Japan," a work which was undoubtedly completed in A.D. 720. The history of the Japanese language is too well known to us, we can trace its development and decay in too many documents reaching from the eighth century to the present time, for it to be possible to entertain the notion that the latest of these Songs, which have been handed down with minute care in a syllabic transcription, is posterior to the first half of the eighth century, while the majority must be ascribed to an earlier, though uncertain, date. If we refer the greater number of them in their present form to the sixth century, and allow a further antiquity of one or two centuries to others more ancient in sentiment and in grammatical usage, we shall probably be making a moderate estimate. It is an estimate, moreover, which obtains confirmation from the fact that the first notice we have of the use of writing in Japan dates from early in the fifth century; for it is natural to suppose that the Songs believed to have been composed by the gods and heroes of antiquity should have been among the first things to be written down, while the reverence in which they were held would in some cases cause them to be transcribed exactly as tradition had bequeathed them, even if unintelligible or nearly so, while in others the same feeling would lead to the correction of what were supposed to be errors or inelegancies. Finally it may be well to observe that the authenticity of the "Records" has never been doubted, though, as has already been stated, some of the native commentators have not hesitated to charge with spuriousness another of their esteemed ancient histories. Now it is unlikely [8] that, in the war which has been waged between the partisans of the "Records" and those of the "Chronicles," some flaw in the former's title to genuineness and to priority should not have been discovered and pointed out if it existed.

During the Middle Ages, when no native Japanese works were printed, and not many others excepting the Chinese Classics and Buddhist Scriptures, the "Records of Ancient Matters" remained in manuscript in the hands of the Shintō priesthood. They were first printed in the year 1644, at the time when, peace having been finally restored to the country and the taste for reading become diffused, the great mass of the native literature first began to emerge from the manuscript state. This very rare edition (which was reprinted in facsimile in 1798) is indispensable to any one who would make of the "Records" a special study. The next edition was by a Shintō priest, Deguchi Nobuyoshi, and appeared in 1687. It has marginal notes of no great value, and several emendations of the text. The first-mentioned of these two editions is commonly called the "Old Printed Edition" 舊印本 but has no title beyond that of the original work,—"Records of Ancient Matters with Marginal Readings" (敝頭古事記). Each is in three volumes. They were succeeded in 1789-1822 by Motowori's great edition, entitled "Exposition of the Records of Ancient Matters" (古事記傳). This, which is perhaps the most admirable work of which Japanese erudition can boast, consists of forty-four large volumes, fifteen of which are devoted to the elucidation of the first volume of the original, seventeen to the second, ten to the third, and the rest to prolegomena, indexes, etc. To the ordinary student this Commentary will furnish all that he requires, and the charm of Motowori's style will be found to shed a glamour over the driest parts of the original work. The author's judgment only seems to fail him occasionally when confronted with the most difficult or corrupt passages, or with such as might be construed in a sense unfavourable to his predilections as an ardent Shintoist. He frequently quotes the opinions of his master Mabuchi, whose own treatise on this subject is so rare that the present writer has never seen a copy of it, nor does the public library of Tōkyō possess one. Later and less important editions are the "Records of Ancient Matters with the Ancient Reading" (古訓古事記), a reprint by one of Motowori's pupils of the Chinese text and of his Master's Kana reading of it without his Commentary, and useful for reference, though the title is a misnomer, 1803; the "Records of Ancient Matters with Marginal Notes" (古事記標註), by Murakami Tadanori, 1874; the "Records of Ancient Matters in the Syllabic Character" (假名古事記) by Sakata no Kaneyasu, 1874, a misleading book, as it gives the modern Kana reading with its arbitrarily inserted Honorifics and other departures from the actual text, as the ipissima verba of the original work; the "Records of Ancient Matters Revised" (校正古事記), by Uematsu Shigewoka, 1875. All these editions are in three volumes, and the "Records of Ancient Matters with the Ancient Reading" has also been reprinted in one volume on beautiful thin paper. Another in four volumes by Fujihara no Masaoki, 1871, entitled the "Records of Ancient Matters in the Divine Character" (神法古事記), is a real curiosity of literature, though otherwise of no value. In it the editor has been at the pains of reproducing the whole work, according to its modern Kana reading, in that adaptation of the Korean alphabetic writing which some modern Japanese authors have supposed to be characters of peculiar age and sanctity, used by the ancient gods of their country and named "Divine Characters" accordingly.

Besides these actual editions of the "Records of Ancient Matters," there is a considerable mass of literature bearing less directly on the same work, and all of which cannot be here enumerated. It may be sufficient to mention the "Correct Account of the Divine Age" (神代正語) by Motowori, 3 Vols. 1789, and a commentary thereon entitled "Tokiha-Gusa" (神代正語常盤草) by Wosada Tominobu, from which the present translator has borrowed a few ideas; the "Sources of the Ancient Histories" (古史徵) and its sequel entitled "Exposition of the Ancient Histories" (古史傳), by Hirata Atsutane, begun printing in 1819,—works which are specially admirable from a philological point of view, and in which the student will find the solution of not a few difficulties which even to Motowori had been insuperable; ⁵ the "Idzu no Chi-Waki" (稜威道別), by Tachibana no Moribe, begun printing in 1851, a useful commentary on the "Chronicles of Japan"; the [19] "Idzu no Koto-Waki" (稜威語別), by the same author, begun printing in 1847, an invaluable help to a comprehension of the Songs contained in both the "Records" and the "Chronicles the Examination of Difficult Words" (難語考, also entitled 山彦冊子), in 3 Vols., 1831, a sort of dictionary of specially perplexing terms and phrases, in which light is thrown on many a verbal crux and much originality of thought displayed; and the "Perpetual Commentary on the Chronicles of Japan" (日本書記通證), by Tanigaha Shisei, 1762, a painstaking work written in the Chinese language, 23 Vols. Neither must the "Kō Gan Shō," (厚題抄), a commentary on the Songs contained in the "Chronicles" and "Records" composed by the Buddhist priest Keichiū, who may be termed the father of the native school of criticism, be forgotten. It is true that most of Keichiū's judgments on doubtful points have been superseded by the more perfect erudition of later days; but some few of his interpretations may still be followed with advantage. The "Kō Gan Shō" which was finished in the year 1691, has never been printed. It is from these and a few others and from the standard dictionaries and general books of reference, such as the "Japanese Words Classified and Explained" (和名類聚鈔), the "Catalogue of Family Names" (姓氏錄), and (coming down to more modern times) Arawi Hakuseki's "Tōga" (東雅), that the translator has derived most assistance. The majority of the useful quotations from the dictionaries, etc., having been incorporated by Motowori in his "Commentary," it has not often been necessary to mention them by name in the notes to the translation. At the same time the translator must express his conviction that, as the native authorities cannot possibly be dispensed with, so also must their assertions be carefully weighed and only accepted with discrimination by the critical European investigator. He must also thank Mr. Tachibana no Chimori, grandson of the eminent scholar Tachibana no Moribe, for kindly allowing him to make use of the unpublished portions Of the "Idzu no Chi-Waki" and the "Idzu no Katō-Waki," works indispensable to the comprehension of the more difficult portion of the text of the "Records." To Mr. Satow he is indebted for the English and Latin equivalents of the Japanese botanical names, to Capt. Blakiston and Mr. Namiye Motokichi for similar assistance with regard to the zoological names.

Comparing what has been said above with what the author tells us in his Preface, the nature of the text, so far as language is concerned, will be easily understood. The Songs are written phonetically, syllable by syllable, in what is technically known as Manyō-Gana, i.e. entire Chinese characters used to represent sound and not sense. The rest of the text, which is in prose, is very poor Chinese, capable (owing to the ideographic nature of the Chinese written character ⁶), of being read off into Japanese. It is also not only full of "Japonisms." But irregularly interspersed with characters which turn the text into nonsense for a Chinaman, as they are used phonetically to represent certain Japanese words, for which the author could not find suitable Chinese equivalents. These phonetically written words prove, even apart from the notice in the Preface, that the text was never meant to be read as pure Chinese. The probability is that (sense being considered more important than sound) it was read partly in Chinese and partly in Japanese, according to a mode which has since been systematized and has become almost universal in this country even in the reading of genuine Chinese texts. The modern school of Japanese literati, who push their hatred of everything foreign to the bounds of fanaticism, contend however that this, their most ancient and revered book, was from the first intended to be read exclusively into Japanese. Drawing from the other sources of our knowledge of the Archaic Dialect, Motowori has even hazarded a restoration of the Japanese reading of the entire prose text, in the whole of which not a single Chinese word is used, excepting for the titles of the two Chinese books (the "Confucian Analects" and the "Thousand Character Essay") which are said to have been brought over to Japan in the reign of the Emperor Ō-jin, and for the names of a Korean King and of three or four other Koreans and Chinese. Whatever may be their opinion on the question at issue, most European scholars, to [11] whom the superior sanctity of the Japanese language is not an article of faith, will probably agree with Mr. Aston ⁷ in denying to this conjectural restoration the credit of representing the genuine words into which Japanese eighth century students of history read off the text of the "Records."

⁶ The translator adopts the term "ideographic," because it is that commonly used and understood, and because this is not the place to demonstrate its inappropriateness. Strictly speaking, "logographic" would be preferable to "ideographic," the difference between Chinese characters and alphabetic writing being that the former represent in their entirety the Chinese words for things and ideas, whereas the latter dissects into their component sounds the words of the languages which it is employed to write.

II. METHODS OF TRANSLATION.

To the translator the question above mooted is not one of great importance. The text itself must form the basis of his version, and not any one's,—not even Motowori's—private and particular reading of it. For this reason none of the Honorifics, which Motowori inserts as prefixes to nouns and terminations to verbs have been taken any notice of, but the original has been followed, character by character, with as great fidelity as was attainable. The author too has his Honorifics; but he does not use them so plentifully or so regularly as it pleases Motowori to represent him as having intended to do. On the other hand, Motowori's occasional emendations of the text may generally be accepted. They rarely extend to more than single words; and the errors in the earlier editions may frequently be shown to have arisen from careless copying of characters originally written, not in the square, but in the cursive form. The translator has separately considered each case where various readings occur, and has mentioned them in the Notes when they seemed of sufficient importance. In some few cases he has preferred a reading not approved by Motowori, but he always mentions Motowori's reading in a Foot-note.

The main body of the text contains but little to perplex any one who has made a special study of the early Japanese writings, and it has already been noticed that there is an admirable exegetical literature at the student's command. With the Songs embedded in the prose text the case is different, as some of them are among the most difficult things in the language, and the commentators frequently arrive at most discordant interpretations of the obscurer passages. In the present version particulars concerning each Song have, except in a very few cases where comment appeared superfluous, been given in a Foot-note, the general sense being usually first indicated, the meaning of particular expressions then explained, and various opinions mentioned when they seemed worthy of notice. Besides one or two terms of Japanese grammar, the only technical knowledge with which the readers of the Notes are necessarily credited is that of the use by the Japanese poets of what have been styled Pillow-Words, Pivots, and Prefaces; and those Pillow-Words which are founded on a jeu-de-mots or are of doubtful signification form, with the one exception mentioned below, the only case where anything contained in the original is omitted from the English version.⁸ After some consideration, it has been deemed advisable to print in an Appendix the Japanese text of all the Songs, transliterated into Roman. Students will thus find it easier to form their own opinion on the interpretation of doubtful passages. The importance likewise of these Songs, as the most ancient specimens of Altaic speech, makes it right to give them as much publicity as possible.

The text of the "Records" is, like many other Japanese texts, completely devoid of breaks corresponding to the chapters and paragraphs into which European works are divided. With the occasional exception of a pause after a catalogue of gods or princes, and of notes inserted in smaller type and generally containing genealogies or indicating the pronunciation of certain words, the whole story, prose and verse, runs on from beginning to end with no interruptions other than those marked by the conclusion of Vol. I and by the death of each emperor in Vols. II and III. Faithfulness however scarcely seems to demand more than this statement; for a similarly continuous printing of the

English version would attain no end but that of making a very dry piece of reading more arduous still. Moreover there are certain traditional names by which the various episodes of the so-called "Divine Age" are known to the native scholars, and according to which the text of Vol. I may naturally be divided. The reigns of the emperors form a similar foundation for the analysis of Vols. II and III, which contain the account of the "Human Age." It has been thought that it would be well to mark such natural divisions by the use of numbered Sections with marginal headings. The titles proposed by Motowori in the Prolegomena to his Commentary have been adopted with scarcely any alteration in the case of Vol. I. In Vols. II and III, where his sections mostly embrace the whole reign of an emperor, and the title given by him to each Section consists only of the name of the palace where each emperor is said to have resided, there is less advantage in following him; for those Sections are often inordinately long, and their titles occasionally misleading and always inconvenient for purposes of reference, as the Japanese emperors are commonly known, not by the names of their places of residence, but by their "canonical names." Motowori, as an ardent nationalist, of course rejected these "canonical names," because they were first applied to the Japanese emperors at a comparatively late date in imitation of Chinese usage. But to a foreigner this need be no sufficient reason for discarding them. The Sections in the translation of Vols. II and III have therefore been obtained by breaking up the longer reigns into appropriate portions; and in such Sections, as also in the Foot-notes, the emperors are always mentioned by their "canonical names." ⁹ The Vol. mentioned in brackets on every right-hand page is that of Motowori's Commentary which treats of the Section contained in that page.

The Notes translated from the original are indented, and are printed small when they are in small type in the Japanese text. Those only which give directions for pronouncing certain characters phonetically have been omitted, as they have no significance when the original tongue and method of writing are exchanged for foreign vehicles of thought and expression. The songs have likewise been indented for the sake of clearness, and each one printed as a separate paragraph. The occasionally unavoidable insertion in the translation of important words not occurring in the Japanese text has been indicated by printing such words within square brackets. The translator's Notes, which figure at the bottom of each page, do not aim at anything more than the exegesis of the actual text. To illustrate its subject-matter from other sources, as Motowori does, and to enlarge on all the subjects connected with Japanese antiquity which are sometimes merely alluded to in a single phrase, would require several more volumes the size of this one, many years of labour on the part of the investigator, and an unusually large stock of patience on the reader's part. The Notes terminate with the death of the Emperor Kenzō, after which the text ceases to offer any interest, except as a comment on the genealogies given in the "Chronicles of Japan."

Without forgetting the fact that so-called equivalent terms in two languages rarely quite cover each other, and that it may therefore be necessary in some cases to render one Japanese word by two or three different English words according to the context, the translator has striven to keep such diversity within the narrowest limits, as it tends to give a false impression of the original, implying that it possesses a versatility of thought which is indeed characteristic of Modern Europe, but not at all of Early Japan. With reference to this point a certain class of words must be mentioned, as the English translation is unavoidably defective in their case, owing to the fact of our language not possessing sufficiently close synonyms for them. They are chiefly the names of titles, and are the following:—

Agata-no-atahe				Roughly rendered by: Departmental Suzerain.
Agata-nushi	"	"	"	Departmental Lord.
Asomi (Ason)	"	"	"	Court Noble.
Atahe	"	"	"	Suzerain.
Hiko	"	"	"	Prince.
Hime	"	"	"	Princess.
Inaki	"	"	"	Territorial Lord.
Iratsuko	"	"	"	Lord.
Iratsume	"	"	"	Lady.
Kami	"	"	"	Deity.
Kimi	"	"	"	Duke.
Ma	"	"	"	True.
Miko (王)	"	"	"	King.
Mi Ko (御子)	"	"	"	August Child.
Mikoto	"	"	"	Augustness.

Miyatsuko	"	"	"	Ruler.
Murazhi	"	"	"	Chief.
Omi	"	"	"	Grandee.
Sukune	"	"	"	Noble.
Wake (in the names of human beings)	"	"	"	Lord.

It must be understood that no special significance is to be attached to the use of such words as "Duke," "Suzerain" etc. They are merely, so to speak, labels by which titles that are distinct in the original are sought to be kept distinct in the translation. Many of them also are used as that species of hereditary titular designation which the translator has ventured to call the "gentile name."¹⁰ Where possible, indeed, the etymological meaning of the Japanese word has been preserved. Thus omi seems to be rightly derived by Motowori from ohomi, "great body"; and "grandee" is therefore the nearest English equivalent. Similarly murazhi, "chief," is a corruption of two words signifying "master of a tribe." On the other hand, both the etymology and the precise import of the title of wake are extremely doubtful. Hiko and hime again, if they really come from hi ko, "sun-child" and hi me, "sun-female" (or "fire child" and "fire female"), have wandered so far from their origin as, even in Archaic times, to have been nothing more than Honorific appellations, corresponding in a loose fashion to the English words "prince and princess," or "lord and lady,"—in some cases perhaps meaning scarcely more than "youth and maiden."

The four words kami, ma, miko and mikoto alone call for special notice; and ma may be disposed of first. It is of uncertain origin, but identified by the native philologists with the perpetually recurring honorific mi, rendered "august." As, when written ideographically, it is always represented by the Chinese character 眞, the translator renders it in English by "true"; but it must be understood that this word has no force beyond that of an Honorific.

Mikoto, rendered "Augustness," is properly a compound, mi koto, "august thing." It is used as a title, somewhat after the fashion of our words "Majesty" and "Highness," being suffixed to the names of exalted human personages, and also of gods and goddesses. For the sake of clearness in the English translation this title is prefixed and used with the possessive pronoun, thus: Yamato-Take-no-Mikoto, His Augustness Yamato-Take.

With regard to the title read miko by the native commentators, it is represented in two ways in the Chinese text. When a young prince is denoted by it, we find the characters 御子, "august child," reminding us of the Spanish title of infante. But in other cases it is written with the single character 王 "King," and it may be questioned whether the reading of it as miko is not arbitrary. Many indications lead us to suppose that in Early Japan something similar to the feudal system, which again obtained during the Middle Ages, was in force; and if so, then some of these "kings" may have been kings indeed after a fashion; and to degrade their title, as do the modern commentators, to that of "prince" is an anachronism. In any case the safest plan, if we would not help to obscure this interesting political question, is to adhere to the proper signification of the character in the text, and that character is 王, "King." ¹¹

Of all the words for which it is hard to find a suitable English equivalent, Kami is the hardest. Indeed there is no English word which renders it with any near approach to exactness. If therefore it is here rendered by the word "deity" ("deity" being preferred to "god" because it includes superior beings of both sexes), it must be clearly understood that the word "deity" is taken in a sense not sanctioned by any English dictionary; for kami, and "deity" or "god," only correspond to each other in a very rough manner. The proper meaning of the word "kami" is "top," or "above"; and it is still constantly so used. For this reason it has the secondary sense of "hair of the head;" and only the hair on the top of the head,—not the hair on the face,—is so designated. Similarly the Government, in popular phraseology, is O Kami, literally "the honorably above"; and down to a few years ago Kami was the name of a certain titular provincial rank. Thus it may be understood how the word was naturally applied to superiors in general, and especially to those more than human superiors whom we call "gods." A Japanese, to whom the origin of the word is patent, and who uses it every day in contexts by no means divine, does not receive from the word Kami the same impression of awe which is produced on the more earnest European mind by the words "deity" and "god," with their very different associations. In using the word "deity," therefore; to translate the Japanese term Kami we must, so to speak, bring it down from the heights to which Western thought has raised it. In fact Kami does not mean much more than "superior." This subject will be noticed again in Section V of the present Introduction; but so far as the word Kami itself is concerned, these remarks may suffice.

To conclude this Section, the translator must advert to his treatment of Proper Names, and he feels that he must plead guilty to a certain amount of inconsistency on this head. Indeed the treatment of Proper Names is always an embarrassment, partly because it is often difficult to determine what is a Proper Name, and partly because in translating a text into a foreign tongue Proper Names, whose meanings are evident in the original and perhaps have a bearing on the story, lose their significance; and the translator has therefore first of all to decide whether the name is really a Proper Name at all or simply a description of the personage or place, and next whether he will sacrifice the meaning because the word is used as a name; or preserve the original name and thus fail to render the meaning,—a meaning which may be of importance as revealing the channels in which ancient thought flowed. For instance "Oho-kuni-nushi-no-kami," the "Deity Master of the Great Land," is clearly nothing more than a description of the god in question, who had several other names, and the reason of whose adoption of this special one was that the sovereignty of the "Great Land," i.e. of Japan (or rather of Idzumo and the neighbouring provinces in north-western Japan), was ceded to him by another god, whom he deceived and whose daughter he ran away with. ¹² Again Toy-ashi-hara-no- chi-aki-no-naga-i-ho-aki-no-midzu-ho-no-kuni, which signifies "the Luxuriant Reed-Moor, the Land of Fresh Rice-ears,—of a Thousand Autumns,—of Long Five Hundred Autumns" cannot possibly be regarded as more than an honorific description of Japan. Such a catalogue of words could never have been used as a name. On the other hand it is plain that Tema was simply the proper name of a certain mountain, because there is no known word in Archaic Japanese to which it can with certainty be traced. The difficulty is with the intermediate cases,—the cases of those names which are but partly comprehensible or partly applicable to their bearers; and the difficulty is one of which there would seem to be no satisfactory solution possible. The translator may therefore merely state that in Vol. I of these "Records," where an unusual number of the Proper Names have a bearing on the legends related in the text, he has, wherever feasible, translated all those which are borne by persons, whether human or divine. In the succeeding Volumes he has not done so, nor has he, except in a very small number of instances, translated the Proper Names of places in any of the three volumes. In order, however, to convey all the needful information both as to sound and as to sense, the Japanese original is always indicated in a Foot-note when the translation has the name in English, and vice versâ, while all doubtful etymologies are discussed.

III. THE "CHRONICLES OF JAPAN."

It will have been gathered from what has been already said, and it is indeed generally known, that the "Records of Ancient Matters" do not stand alone. To say nothing of the "Chronicles of Old Matters of Former Age" whose genuineness is disputed, there is another undoubtedly authentic work with which no student of Japanese antiquity can dispense. It is entitled Nihon-Gi, i.e., "Chronicles of Japan," and is second only in value to the "Records," which it has always excelled in popular favour. It was completed in A.D. 720, eight years after the "Records of Ancient Matters" had been presented to the Empress Gem-miyo.

The scope of the two histories is the same; but the language of the later one and its manner of treating the national traditions stand in notable contrast to the unpretending simplicity of the elder work. Not only is the style (excepting in the Songs, which had to be left as they were or sacrificed altogether) completely Chinese,—in fact to a great extent a cento of well-worn Chinese phrases,—but the subject-matter is touched up, rearranged, and polished, so as to make the work resemble a Chinese history so far as that was possible. Chinese philosophical speculations and moral precepts are intermingled with the cruder traditions that had descended from Japanese antiquity. Thus the naturalistic Japanese account of the creation is ushered in by a few sentences which trace the origin of all things to Yin and Yang (陰陽), the Passive and Active Essences of Chinese philosophy. The legendary Emperor Jim-mu is credited with speeches made up of quotations from the "Yi Ching,"¹³ the "Li Chi,"¹⁴ and other standard Chinese works. A few of the most childish of the national traditions are omitted, for instance the story of the "White Hare of Inaba," that of the gods obtaining counsel of a toad, and that of the hospitality which a speaking mouse extended to the deity Master-of-the Great-Land.¹⁵ Sometimes the original tradition is simply softened down or explained away. A notable instance of this occurs in the account of the visit of the deity Izanagi¹⁶ to Hades, whither he goes in quest of his dead wife, and among other things has to scale the "Even Pass (or Hill) of Hades."¹⁷ In the tradition preserved in the "Records" and indeed even in the "Chronicles," this pass or hill is mentioned as a literal geographical fact. But the compiler of the latter work, whose object it was to appear and to make his forefathers appear, as reasonable as a learned Chinese, adds a gloss to the effect that "One account says that the Even Hill of Hades is no distinct place, but simply the moment when breathing ceases at the time of death";—not a happy guess certainly, for this pass is mentioned in connection with Izanagi's return to the land of the living. In short we may say of this work what was said of the Septuagint,—that it rationalizes.

Perhaps it will be asked, how can it have come to pass that a book in which the national traditions are thus unmistakably tampered with, and which is moreover written in Chinese instead of in the native tongue, has enjoyed such a much greater share of popularity than the more genuine work?

¹⁶ Rendered in the English translation by "the Male-Who-Invites."

¹⁷ Yomo tsu Hira-Saka.

The answer lies on the surface: the concessions made to Chinese notions went far towards satisfying minds trained on Chinese models, while at the same time the reader had his respect for the old native emperors increased, and was enabled to preserve some sort of belief in the native gods. People are rarely quite logical in such matters, particularly in an early stage of society; and difficulties are glossed over rather than insisted upon. The beginning of the world, for instance, or, to use Japanese phraseology, the "separation of heaven and earth" took place a long time ago; and perhaps, although there could of course be no philosophical doubt as to the course of this event having been the interaction of the Passive and Active Essences, it might also somehow be true that Izanagi and Izanami (the "Male-Who-Invites" and the "Female-Who-Invites") were the progenitor and progenitrix of Japan. Who knows but what in them the formative principles may not have been embodied, represented, or figured forth after a fashion not quite determined, but none the less real? As a matter of fact, the two deities in question have often been spoken of in Japanese books under such designations as the "Yin Deity" and the "Yang Deity," and in his Chinese Preface the very compiler of these "Records" lends his sanction to the use of such phraseology, though, if we look closely at the part taken by the gods in the legend narrated in Sect. IV, it would seem but imperfectly applicable. If again early sovereigns, such as the Empress Jin-gō, address their troops in sentences cribbed from the "Shu Ching,"¹⁸ or, like the Emperor Kei-kō, describe the Ainos in terms that would only suit the pages of a Chinese topographer,—both these personages being supposed to have lived prior to the opening up of intercourse with the continent of Asia,—the anachronism was partly hidden by the fact of the work which thus recorded their doings being itself written in the Chinese language, where such phrases only sounded natural. In some instances, too, the Chinese usage had so completely superseded the native one as to cause the latter to have been almost forgotten excepting by the members of the Shintō priesthood. This happened in the case of the Chinese method of divination by means of a tortoise-shell, whose introduction caused the elder native custom of divination through the shoulder-blade of a deer to fall into desuetude. Whether indeed this native custom itself may not perhaps be traced back to still earlier continental influence is another question. So far as any documentary information reaches, divination through the shoulder-blade of a deer was the most ancient Japanese method of ascertaining the will of the gods. The use of the Chinese sexagenary cycle for counting years, months, and days is another instance of the imported usage having become so thoroughly incorporated with native habits of mind as to make the anachronism of employing it when speaking of a period confessedly anterior to the introduction of continental civilization pass unnoticed. As for the (to a modern European) grotesque notion of pretending to give the precise months and days of events supposed to have occurred a thousand years before the date assigned to the introduction of astronomical instruments, of observatories, and even of the art of writing, that is another of those inconsistencies which, while lying on the very surface, yet so easily escape the uncritical Oriental mind.¹⁹ Semi-civilized people tire of asking questions, and to question antiquity, which fills so great a place in their thoughts, is the last thing that would occur to any of their learned men, whose mental attitude is characteristically represented by Confucius when he calls himself "A transmitter and not a maker, believing in and loving the ancients."²⁰ As regards the question of language, standard Chinese soon became easier to understand than Archaic Japanese, as the former alone was taught in the schools and the native language changed rapidly during the century or two that followed the diffusion of the foreign tongue and civilization. We have only to call to mind the relative facility to most of ourselves of a Latin book and of one written in Early English. Of course, as soon as the principles of the Japanese Renaissance had taken hold of men's minds in the eighteenth century, the more genuine, more national work assumed its proper place in the estimation of students. But the uncouthness of the style according to modern ideas, and the greater amount of explanation of all sorts that is required in order to make the "Records of Ancient Matters" intelligible, must always prevent them from attaining to the popularity of the sister history. Thus, though published almost simultaneously, the tendencies of the two works were very different, and their fate has differed accordingly.

To the European student the chief value of the "Chronicles of Japan" lies in the fact that their author, in treating of the so-called "Divine Age," often gives a number of various forms of the same legend under the heading of 'One account says,' suffixed in the form of a note to the main text. No phrase is more commonly met with in later treatises on Japanese history than this,—"One account in the 'Chronicles of Japan' says," and it will be met with occasionally in the Foot-notes to the present translation. There are likewise instances of the author of the "Chronicles" having preserved, either in the text or in "One account," traditions omitted by the compiler of the "Records." Such are, for instance, the quaint legend invented to explain the fact that the sun and moon do not shine simultaneously,²¹ and the curious development of the legend of the expulsion of the deity Susa-no-wo ("Impetuous Male"), telling us of the hospitality which was refused to him by the other gods when he appeared before them to beg for shelter. Many of the Songs, too, in the "Chronicles" are different from those in the "Records," and make a precious addition to our vocabulary of Archaic Japanese. The prose text, likewise, contains in the shape of notes, numbers of readings by which the pronunciation of words written ideographically, or the meaning of words written phonetically in the "Records" may be ascertained. Finally the "Chronicles" give us the

²¹ It may perhaps be worth while to quote this legend in full. It is as follows: p. xxxii

"One account says that the Heaven-Shining Great Deity, being in Heaven said: 'I hear that in the Central Land of Reed-Plains (i.e. Japan) there is a Food-Possessing Deity. Do, thou, Thine Augustness Moon-Night Possessor, go and see.' His Augustness the Moon-Night Possessor, having received these orders, descended [to earth], and arrived at the place where the Food-Possessing Deity was. The Food-Possessing Deity forthwith, on turning her head towards the land, produced rice from her mouth; again, on turning to the sea, she also produced from her mouth things broad of fin and things narrow of fin; again, on turning to the mountains, she also produced from her mouth things rough of hair and things soft of hair. Having collected together all these things, she offered them [to the Moon-God] as a feast on a hundred tables. At this time His Augustness the Moon-Night-Possessor, being angry and colouring up, said: 'How filthy! how vulgar! What! shalt thou dare to feed me with things spat out from thy mouth?' [and with these words], he drew his sabre and slew her. Afterwards he made his report [to the Sun-Goddess]. When he told her all the particulars, the Heaven-Shining Great Deity was very angry, and said: 'Thou art a wicked Deity, whom it is not right for me to see;'—and forthwith she and His Augustness the Moon-Night-Possessor dwelt separately day and night." The partly Parallel legend given in these "Records" forms the subject of Sect. XVII of the Translation.

annals of seventy-two years not comprised in the plan of the "Records," by carrying down to A.D. 700 the history which in the "Records" stops at the year 628. Although therefore it is a mistake to assert, as some have done, that the "Chronicles of Japan" must be placed at the head of all the Japanese historical works, their assistance can in no wise be dispensed with by the student of Japanese mythology and of the Japanese language. ²²

IV. MANNERS AND CUSTOMS OF THE EARLY JAPANESE.

The Japanese of the mythical period, as pictured in the legends preserved by the compiler of the "Records of Ancient Matters," were a race who had long emerged from the savage state, and had attained to a high level of barbaric skill. The Stone Age was forgotten by them—or nearly so,—and the evidence points to their never having passed through a genuine Bronze Age, though the knowledge of bronze was at a later period introduced from the neighbouring continent. They used iron for manufacturing spears, swords, and knives of various shapes, and likewise for the more peaceful purpose of making hooks wherewith to angle, or to fasten the doors of their huts. Their other warlike and hunting implements (besides traps and gins, which appear to have been used equally for catching beasts and birds and for destroying human enemies) were bows and elbow-pads,—the latter seemingly of skin, while special allusion is made to the fact that the arrows were feathered. Perhaps clubs should be added to the list. Of the bows and arrows, swords and knives, there is perpetual mention; but nowhere do we hear of the tools with which they were manufactured, and there is the same remarkable silence regarding such widely spread domestic implements as the saw and the axe. We hear, however, of the pestle and fire-drill, of the wedge, of the sickle, and of the shuttle used in weaving.

Navigation seems to have been in a very elementary stage. Indeed the art of sailing was, as we know from the classical literature of the country, but little practised in Japan even so late as the middle of the tenth century of our era subsequent to the general diffusion of Chinese civilization, though rowing and punting are often mentioned by the early poets. In one passage of the "Records" and in another of the "Chronicles," mention is made of a "two-forked boat" used on inland pools or lakes; but, as a rule, in the earlier portions of those works, we read only of people going to sea or being sent down from heaven in water-proof baskets without oars, and reaching their destination not through any efforts of their own, but through supernatural inter-position.²³

To what we should call towns or villages very little reference is made anywhere in the "Records" or in that portion of the "Chronicles" which contains the account of the so-called "Divine Age." But from what we learn incidentally, it would seem that the scanty population was chiefly distributed in small hamlets and isolated dwellings along the coast and up the course of the larger streams. Of house-building there is frequent mention,—especially of the building of palaces or temples for sovereigns or gods,—the words "palace" and "temple" being (it should be mentioned) represented in Japanese by the same term. Sometimes, in describing the construction of such a sacred dwelling, the author of the "Records," abandoning his usual fiat and monotonous style, soars away on poetic wings, as when, for instance, he tells how the monarch of Idzumo, on abdicating in favour of the Sun-Goddess's descendant, covenanted that the latter should "make stout his temple pillars on the nethermost rock-bottom, and make high the cross-beams to the plain of High Heaven." ²⁴ It must not, however, be inferred from such language that these so-called palaces and temples were of very gorgeous and imposing aspect. The more exact notices to be culled from the ancient Shintō Rituals (which are but little posterior to the "Records" and in no wise contradict the inferences to be drawn from the latter) having been already summarized by Mr. Satow, it may be as well to quote that gentleman's words. He says: ²⁵ "The palace of the Japanese sovereign was a wooden hut, with its pillars planted in the ground, instead of being erected upon broad fiat stories as in modern buildings. The whole frame-work, consisting of posts, beams, rafters, door-posts and window-frames, was tied together with cords made by twisting the long fibrous stems of climbing plants, such as Pueraria Thunbergiana (kuzu) and Wistaria Sinensis (fuji). The floor must have been low down, so that the occupants of the building, as they squatted or lay on their mats, were exposed to the stealthy attacks of venomous snakes, which were probably far more numerous in the earliest ages when the country was for the most part uncultivated, than at the present day . . . There seems some reason to think that the yuka, here translated floor, was originally nothing but a couch which ran round the sides of the hut, the rest of the space being simply a mud-floor, and that the size of the couch was gradually increased until it occupied the whole interior. The rafters projected upward beyond the ridge-pole, crossing each other as is seen in the roofs of modern Shin-tau temples, whether their architecture be in conformity with early traditions (in which case all the rafters are so crossed) or modified in accordance with more advanced principles of construction, and the crossed rafters retained only as ornaments at the two ends of the ridge. The roof was thatched, and perhaps had a gable at each end, with a hole to allow the smoke of the wood-fire to escape, so that it was possible for birds flying in and perching on the beams overhead, to defile the food, or the fire with which it was cooked." To this description it need only be added that fences were in use, and that the wooden doors, sometimes fastened by means of hooks, resembled those with which we are familiar in Europe rather than the sliding, screen-like doors of modern Japan. The windows seem to have been mere holes. Rugs of skins and rush matting were occasionally brought in to sit upon, and we even hear once or twice of "silk rugs" being used for the same purpose by the noble and wealthy.

The habits of personal cleanliness which so pleasantly distinguish the modern Japanese from their neighbours, in continental Asia, though less fully developed than at present, would seem to have existed in the germ in early times, as we read more than once of bathing in rivers, and are told of bathing-women being specially attached to the person of a certain imperial infant. Lustrations, too, formed part of the religious practices of the race. Latrines are mentioned several times. They would appear to have been situated away from the houses and to have generally been placed over a running stream, whence doubtless the name for latrine in the Archaic Dialect, kaha-ya i.e. "river house." A well-known Japanese classic of the tenth century, the "Yamato Tales," ²⁶ tells us indeed that "in older days the people dwelt in houses raised on platforms built out on the river Ikuta," and goes on to relate a story which presupposes such a method of architecture. ²⁷ A passage in the account of the reign of the Emperor Jim-mu which occurs both in the "Records" and in the "Chronicles," and another in the reign of the Emperor Sui-nin occurring in the "Records" only, might be interpreted so as to support this statement.²⁸ But both are extremely obscure, and beyond the fact that people who habitually lived near the water may have built their houses after the aquatic fashion practised in different parts of the world by certain savage tribes both ancient and modern, the present writer is not aware of any authority for the assertion that they actually did so except the isolated passage in the "Yamato Tales" just quoted.

A peculiar sort of dwelling-place which the two old histories bring prominently under our notice, is the so called "Parturition-house,"—a one-roomed hut without windows which a woman was expected to build and retire into for the purpose of being delivered unseen.²⁹ It would also appear to be not unlikely that newly-married couples retired into a specially built hut for the purpose of consummating the marriage, and it is certain that for each sovereign a new palace was erected on his accession.

Castles are not distinctly spoken of till a period which, though still mythical in the opinion of the present writer, coincides according to the received chronology with the first century B. C. We then first meet with the curious term "rice-castle," whose precise signification is a matter of dispute among the native commentators, but which, on comparison with Chinese descriptions of the Early Japanese, should probably be understood to mean a kind of palisade serving the purpose of a redoubt, behind which the warriors could ensconce themselves.³⁰ If this conjecture be correct, we have here a good instance of a word, so to speak, moving upward with the march of civilization, the term, which formerly denoted something not much better than a fence, having later come to convey the idea of a stone castle.

To conclude the subject of dwelling-places, it should be stated that cave-dwellers are sometimes alluded to. The legend of the retirement of the Sun-Goddess into a cavern may possibly suggest to some the idea of an early period when such habitations were the normal abodes of the ancestors of the Japanese race.³¹ But at the time when the national traditions assumed their present shape, such a state of things had certainly ²⁸ See Sect. XLIV, Note 12 and Sect. LXXII, Note 29.

²⁹ Mr. Ernest Satow, who in 1898 visited the island of Hachijo, gives the following detail concerning the observance down to modern times in that remote corner of the Japanese Empire of the custom mentioned in the text: "in Hachijo women, when about to become mothers, were formerly driven out to the huts on the mountain-side, and according to the accounts of native writers, left to shift for themselves, the result not unfrequently being the death of the newborn infant, or if it survived the rude circumstances under which it first saw the light, the seeds of disease were sown which clung to it throughout its after life. The rule of non-intercourse was so strictly enforced, that the woman was not allowed to leave the hut even to visit her own parents at the point of death, and besides the injurious effects that this solitary confinement must have had on the wives themselves, their prolonged absence was a serious loss to households, where there were elder children and large establishments to be superintended. The rigour of the custom was so far relaxed in modern times, that the huts were no longer built on the hills, but were constructed inside the homestead. It was a subject of wonder to people from other parts of Japan that the senseless practice should still be kept up, and its abolition was often recommended, but the administration of the Shoguns was not animated by a reforming spirit, and it remained for the Government of the Mikado to exhort the islanders to abandon this and the previously mentioned custom. They are therefore no longer sanctioned by official authority and the force of social opinion against them is increasing, so that before long these relics of ancient ceremonial religion will in all probability have disappeared from the group of islands." (Trans. of the Asiat. Soc. of Japan, Vol. VI, Part III,, pp. 455-6.)

³⁰ See Sect. LXX, Note 6. The Japanese term is ina-ki, ki being an Archaic term for "castle."

quite passed away, if it ever existed, and only barbarous Ainos and rough bands of robbers are credited with the construction of such primitive retreats. Natural caves (it may be well to state) are rare in Japan, and the caves that are alluded to were mostly artificial, as may be gathered from the context.

The food of the Early Japanese consisted of fish and of the flesh of the wild creatures which fell by the hunter's arrow or were taken in the trapper's snare,—an animal diet with which Buddhist prohibitions had not yet interfered, as they began to do in early historical times. Rice is the only cereal of which there is such mention made as to place it beyond a doubt that its cultivation dates back to time immemorial. Beans, millet, and barley are indeed named once, together with silkworms, in the account of the "Divine Age."³² But the passage has every aspect of an interpolation in the legend, perhaps not dating back long before the time of the eighth century compiler. A few unimportant vegetables and fruits, of most of which there is but a single mention, will be found in the list of plants given below. The intoxicating liquor called sake was known in Japan during the mythical period³³ and so were chopsticks for eating the food with. Cooking-pots and cups and dishes—the latter both of earthenware and of leaves of trees,—are also mentioned; but of the use of fire for warming purposes we hear nothing. Tables are named several times, but never in connection with food. They would seem to have been exclusively used for the purpose of presenting offerings on, and were probably quite small and low,—in fact rather trays than tables according to European ideas.

In the use of clothing and the specialization of garments the Early Japanese had reached a high level. We read in the most ancient legends of upper garments, skirts, trowsers, girdles, veils, and hats, while both sexes adorned themselves with necklaces, bracelets, and head-ornaments of stones considered precious,—in this respect offering a striking contrast to their descendants in modern times, of whose attire jewelry forms no part. The material of their clothes was hempen cloth and paper-mulberry bark, coloured by being rubbed with madder, and probably with woad and other tinctorial plants. All the garments, so far as we may judge, were woven, sewing being nowhere mentioned, and it being expressly stated by the Chinese commentator on the "Shan Hai Ching,"³⁴ who wrote early in the fourth century, that the Japanese had no needles.³⁵ From the great place which the chase occupied in daily life we are led to suppose that skins also were used to make garments of. There is in the "Records" at least one passage which favours this supposition,³⁶ and the "Chronicles" in one place mention the straw rain-coat and broad-brimmed hat, which still form the Japanese peasant's effectual protection against the inclemencies of the weather. The tendrils of creeping plants served the purposes of string, and bound the warrior's sword round his waist. Combs are mentioned, and it is evident that much attention was devoted to the dressing of the hair. The men seem to have bound up their hair in two bunches, one on each side of the head, whilst the young boys tied theirs into a topknot, the unmarried girls let their locks hang down over their necks, and the married women dressed theirs after a fashion which apparently combined the two last-named methods. There is no mention in any of the old books of cutting the hair or beard except in token of disgrace; neither do we gather that the sexes, but for this matter of the headdress, were distinguished by a diversity of apparel and ornamentation.

With regard to the precious stones mentioned above as having been used as ornaments for the head, neck, and arms, the texts themselves give us little or no information as to the identity of the stones meant to be referred to. Indeed it is plain (and the native commentators admit the fact) that a variety of Chinese characters properly denoting different sort of jewels were used indiscriminately by the early Japanese writers to represent the single native word tama which is the only one the language contains to denote any hard substance on which a special value is set, and which often refers chiefly to the rounded shape, so that it might in fact be translated by the word "bead" as fittingly as by the word "jewel." We know, however, from the specimens which have rewarded the labours of archaeological research in Japan that agate, crystal, glass, jade, serpentine, and steatite are the most usual materials, and carved and pierced cylindrical shapes (maga-tama and kuda-tama), the commonest forms.³⁷

The horse (which was ridden, but not driven), the barn-door fowl, and the cormorant used for fishing) are the only domesticated creatures mentioned in the earlier traditions, with the doubtful exception of the silkworm, to which reference has already been made.³⁸ In the later portions of the "Records" and "Chronicles," dogs and cattle are alluded to; but sheep, swine, and even cats were apparently not yet introduced. Indeed sheep were scarcely to be seen in Japan until a few years ago, goats are still almost unknown, and swine and all poultry excepting the barn-door fowl extremely uncommon.

The following enumeration of the animals and plants mentioned in the earlier portion³⁹ of the "Records" may be of interest. The Japanese equivalents, some few of which are obsolete, are put in parenthesis, together with the Chinese characters used to write them:

³⁸ The tradition preserved in Sect. CXXIV, shows that in times almost, if not quite, historical (the 4th century of our era) the silkworm was a curious novelty, apparently imported from Korea. It is not only possible, but probable, that silken fabrics were occasionally imported into Japan from the mainland at an earlier period, which would account for the mention of "silk rugs" in Sects XL and LXXXIV.

³⁹ The (necessarily somewhat arbitrary) line between earlier and later times has been drawn at the epoch of the traditional conquest of Korea by the Empress Jin-go at the commencement of the third century of our era, it being then, according to the received opinions, that the Japanese first came in contact with their continental neighbours, and began to borrow from them. (See however the concluding Section of this Introduction for a demonstration of the untrustworthiness of all the so-called history of Japan down to the commencement of the fifth century of the Christian era).

 Water caltrop, [Trapa bispinosa] (hishi 菱).
 Wild garlic [Allium nipponicum] (nubiru 野蒜).
Zelkova keaki [probably] (tsuki 槻).

A few more are probably preserved in the names of places. Thus in Shinano, the name of a province, we seem to have the shina (Tilia cordata), and in Tadetsu the tade (Polygonum japonicum). But the identification in these cases is mostly uncertain. It must also be remembered that, as in the case of all non-scientific nomenclatures, several species, and occasionally even more than one genus, are included in a single Japanese term. The chi-dori (here always rendered "dotterel") is the name of any kind of sand-piper, plover or dotterel. Kari is a general name applied to geese, but not to all the species, and also to the great bustard. Again it should not be forgotten that there may have been, and probably were, in the application of some of these terms, differences of usage between the present day and eleven or twelve centuries ago. Absolute precision is therefore not attainable. ⁴²

Noticeable in the above lists is the abundant mention of plant-names in a work which is in no ways occupied with botany. Equally noticeable is the absence of some of those which are most common at the present day, such as the tea-plant and the plum-tree, while of the orange we are specially informed that it was introduced from abroad. ⁴³ The difference between the various stones and metals seems, on the other hand, to have attracted very little attention from the Early Japanese. In late times the chief metals were named mostly according to their colour, as follows:

⁴² Sect. CXXXVIII preserves a very early ornithological observation in the shape of the Songs composed by the Emperor Nin-toku and his Minister Take-Uchi on the subject of a wild-goose laying eggs in Central Japan. These birds are not known to breed even so far South as the island of Yezo.

⁴³ See the legend in Sect. LXXIV.

Yellow metal	(gold).
White metal	(silver).
Red metal	(copper).
Black metal	(iron).
Chinese (or Korean) metal	(bronze).

But in the "Records" the only metal of which it is implied that it was in use from time immemorial is iron, while "various treasures dazzling to the eye, from gold and silver downwards," are only referred to once as existing in the far-western land of Korea. Red clay is the sole kind of earth specially named.

Black.
Blue (including Green).
Red.
Piebald (of horses).
White.

Yellow is not mentioned (except in the foreign Chinese phrase "the Yellow Stream," signifying Hades, and not to be counted in this context), neither are any of the numerous terms which in Modern Japanese serve to distinguish delicate shades of colour. We hear of the "blue (or green) (i.e. black ⁴⁴) clouds" and also of the "blue (or green), sea"; but the "blue sky" is conspicuous by its absence here as in so many other early literatures, though strangely enough it does occur in the oldest written monuments of the Chinese.

With regard to the subject of names for the different degrees of relationship,—a subject of sufficient interest to the student of sociology to warrant its being discussed at some length,—it may be stated that in modern Japanese parlance the categories according to which relationship is conceived of do not materially differ from those that are current in Europe. Thus we find father, grandfather, great-grandfather, uncle, nephew, stepfather, stepson, father-in-law, and the corresponding terms for females,—mother, grandmother etc.,—as well as such vaguer designations as parents, ancestors, cousins, and kinsmen, The only striking difference is that brothers and sisters, instead of being considered as all mutually related in the same manner, are divided into two categories, viz:

Ani	兄	elder brother(s),

⁴⁴ Mr. Satow suggests that awo ("blue" or "green") means property any colour derived from the awi plant (Polygonum tinctorium.)

Otouto	弟	younger brother(s),
Ane	姉	elder sister(s),
Imouto	妹	younger sister(s).

in exact accordance with Chinese usage.

Now in Archaic times there seems to have been a different and more complicated system, somewhat resembling that which still obtains among the natives of Korea, and which the introduction of Chinese ideas and especially the use of the Chinese written characters must have caused to be afterwards abandoned. There are indications of it in some of the phonetically written fragments of the "Records." But they are not of themselves sufficient to furnish a satisfactory explanation, and the subject has puzzled the native literati themselves. Moreover the English language fails us at this point, and elder and younger brother, elder and younger sister are the only terms at the translator's command. It may therefore be as well to quote in extenso Motowori's elucidation of the Archaic usage to be found in vol. XIII, p. 63-4 of his "Exposition of the Records of Ancient Matters." ⁴⁵ He says: "Anciently, when brothers and sisters were spoken of, the elder brother was called se or ani in contradistinction to the younger brothers and younger sisters, and the younger brother also was called se in contradistinction to the elder sister. The elder sister was called ane in contradistinction to the younger sister, and the younger brother also would use the word ane in speaking of his elder sister himself. The younger brother was called oto in contradistinction to the elder brother, and the younger sister also was called oto in contradistinction to the elder sister. The younger sister was called imo in contradistinction to the elder brother, and the elder sister also was called imo in contradistinction to the younger brother. It was also the custom among brothers and sisters to use the words iro-se for se, iro-ne for ane, and iro-do for oto, and analogy forces us to conclude that iro-mo was used for imo." (Motowori elsewhere explains iro as a term of endearment identical with the word iro, "love"; but we may hesitate to accept this view.) It will be observed that the foundation of this system of nomenclature was a subordination of the younger to the elder-born modified by a subordination of the females to the males. In the East, especially in primitive times, it is not "Place aux dames," but "Place aux messieurs."

Another important point to notice is that, though in a few passages of the "Records" we find a distinction drawn between the chief and the secondary wives, perhaps nothing more than the favorite or better-born, and the less well-born, are meant to be thus designated,—yet not only is this distinction not drawn throughout, but the wife is constantly spoken of as imo, i.e. "younger sister." It fact sister and wife were convertible terms and ideas; and what in a later stage of Japanese, as of Western, civilization is abhorred as incest was in Archaic Japanese times the common practice. We also hear of marriages with half-sisters, with stepmothers, and with aunts; and to wed two or three sisters at the same time was a recognized usage. Most such unions were naturally so contrary to Chinese ethical ideas, that one of the first traces of the influence of the latter in Japan was the stigmatizing of them as incest; and the conflict between the old native custom and the imported moral code is seen to have resulted in political troubles. ⁴⁶ Marriage with sisters was naturally the first to disappear, and indeed it is only mentioned in the legends of the gods; but unions with half-sisters, aunts, etc., lasted on into the historic epoch. Of exogamy, such as obtains in China, there is no trace in any Japanese document, nor do any other artificial impediments seem to have stood in the way of the free choice of the Early Japanese man, who also (in some cases at least) received a dowry with his bride or brides.

If, taking as our guides the incidental notices which are scattered up and down the pages of the earlier portion of the "Records" we endeavour to follow an Archaic Japanese through the chief events of his life from the cradle to the tomb, it will be necessary to begin by recalling what has already been alluded to as the 'parturition-house' built by the mother, and in which, as we are specially told that it was made windowless, it would perhaps be contradictory to say that the infant first saw the light. Soon after birth a name was given to it,—given to it by the mother,—such name generally containing some appropriate personal reference. In the most ancient times each person (so far as we can judge) bore but one name, or rather one string of words compounded together into a sort of personal designation. But already at the dawn of the historical epoch we are met by the mention of surnames and of what, in the absence of a more fitting word, the translator has ventured to call "gentile names," bestowed by the sovereign as a recompense for some noteworthy deed. ⁴⁷

It may be gathered from our text that the idea of calling in the services of wet-nurses in exceptional case had already suggested itself to the minds of the ruling class, whose infants were likewise sometimes attended by special bathing-women. To what we should call education, whether mental or physical, there is absolutely no reference made in the histories. All that can be inferred is that, when old enough to do so, the boys began to follow one of the callings of hunter or fisherman, while the girls staid at home weaving the garments of the family. There was also a great deal of fighting, generally of a treacherous kind, in the intervals of which the warriors occupied themselves in cultivating patches of ground. The very little which is to be gathered concerning the treatment of old people would seem to indicate that they were well cared for.

We are nowhere told of any wedding ceremonies except the giving of presents by the bride or her father, the probable reason being that no such ceremonies existed. Indeed late on into the Middle Age cohabitation alone constituted matrimony,—cohabitation often secret at first, but afterwards acknowledged, when, instead of going round under cover of night to visit his mistress, the young man brought her back publicly to his parents' house. Mistress, wife, and concubine were thus terms which were not distinguished, and the woman could naturally be discarded at any moment. She indeed was expected to remain faithful to the man with whom she had had more than a passing intimacy, but no reciprocal obligation bound him to her. Thus the wife of one of the gods is made to address her husband in a poem which says:

⁴⁶ See the story of Prince Karu, which is probably historical, in Sects. CXLI et seq.

⁴⁷ The custom of using surnames was certainly borrowed from China, although the Japanese have not, like the Koreans, gone so far as to adopt the actual surnames in use in that country. The "gentile names" may have sprung up more naturally, though they too show traces of Chinese influence. Those most frequently met with are Agata-nushi, Ason, Atahe, Kimi, Miyatsuko, Murazhi, Omi, Sukune, and Wake. See above, pp. xv-xvi.

"Thou . . . indeed, being a man, probably hast on the various island-headlands that thou seest, and on every beach-headland that thou lookest on, a wife like the young herbs. But I, alas! being a woman, have no spouse except thee," etc., etc. ⁴⁸

In this sombre picture the only graceful touch is the custom which lovers or spouses had of tying each other's girdles when about to part for a time,—a ceremony by which they implied that they would be constant to each other during the period of absence. ⁴⁹ What became of the children in cases of conjugal separation does not clearly appear. In the only instance which is related at length, we find the child left with the father; but this instance is not a normal one. ⁵⁰ Adoption is not mentioned in the earliest traditions; so that when we meet with it later on we shall probably be justified in tracing its introduction to Chinese sources.

Of death-bed scenes and dying speeches we hear but little, and that little need not detain us. The burial rites are more important. The various ceremonies observed on such an occasion are indeed not explicitly detailed. But we gather thus much: that the hut tenanted by the deceased was abandoned,—an ancient custom to whose former existence the removal of the capital at the commencement of each reign long continued to bear witness,—and that the body was first deposited for some days in a "mourning-house," during which interval the survivors (though their tears and lamentations are also mentioned) held a carousal, feasting perhaps on the food which was specially prepared as an offering to the dead person. Afterwards, the corpse was interred, presumably in a wooden bier, as the introduction of stone tombs is specially noted by the historian as having taken place at the end of the reign of the Emperor Sui-nin, and was therefore believed by those who handed down the legendary history to have been a comparatively recent innovation, the date assigned to this monarch by the author of the "Chronicles" coinciding with the latter part of our first, and the first half of our second centuries. To a time not long anterior is attributed the abolition of a custom previously observed at the interments of royal personages. This custom was the burying alive of some of their retainers in the neighbourhood of the tomb. We know also, both from other early literary sources and from the finds which have recently rewarded the labours of archaeologists, that articles of Clothing, ornaments, etc., were buried with the corpse. it is all the more curious that the "Records" should nowhere make any reference to such a custom, and is a proof (if any be needed) of the necessity of not relying exclusively on any single authority, however respectable, if the full and true picture of Japanese antiquity is to be restored. A few details as to the abolition of the custom of burying retainers alive round their master's tomb, and of the substitution for this cruel holocaust of images in clay will be found in Sect. LXIII, Note 23, and in Sect. LXXV, Note 4, of the following translation. ⁵¹ If the custom be one which is properly included under ⁴⁸ See Sect. XXV (the second Song in that Section).

⁴⁹ See Sect LXXI, Note 12.

⁵⁰ See Sect. XLII.

⁵¹ Representations of these clay images (Tsuchi-nin-giyō) will be found in Table XII of Mr. Henry von Siebold's "Notes on Japanese Archaeology," and in Mr. Satow's paper on "Ancient Sepulchral Mounds in Kaudzuke" published in Vol. VII, Pt. III, pp. 313 et seq. of these "Transactions."

the heading of human sacrifices, it is the only form of such sacrifices of which the earliest recorded Japanese social state retained any trace. The absence of slavery is another honourable feature. On the other hand, the most cruel punishments were dealt out to enemies and wrongdoers. Their nails were extracted, the sinews of their knees were cut, they were buried up to the neck so that their eyes burst, etc. Death, too, was inflicted for the most trivial offences. Of branding, or rather tattooing, the face as a punishment there are one or two incidental mentions. But as no tattooing or other marking or painting of the body for any other purpose is ever alluded to, with the solitary exception in one passage of the painting of her eyebrows by a woman, it is possible that the penal use of tattooing may have been borrowed from the Chinese, to whom it was not unknown.

The shocking obscenity of word and act to which the "Records" bear witness is another ugly feature which must not quite be passed over in silence. It is true that decency, as we understand it, is a very modern product, and is not to be looked for in any society in the barbarous stage. At the same time, the whole range of literature might perhaps be ransacked in vain for a parallel to the naïve filthiness of the passage forming Sect. IV of the following translation, or to the extraordinary topic which the hero Yamato-Take and his mistress Miyazu are made to select as the theme of poetical repartee.⁵² One passage likewise would lead us to suppose that the most beastly crimes were commonly committed.⁵³

To conclude this portion of the subject, it may be useful for the sake of comparison to call attention to a few arts and products with which the early Japanese were not acquainted. Thus they had no tea, no fans, no porcelain, no lacquer,—none of the things, in fact, by which in later times they have been chiefly known. They did not yet use vehicles of any kind. They had no accurate method of computing time, no money, scarcely any knowledge of medicine. Neither, though they possessed some sort of music, and poems a few of which at least are not without merit,⁵⁴ do we hear anything of the art of drawing. But the most important art of which they were ignorant is that of writing. As some misapprehension has existed on this head, and scholars in [43] Europe have been misled by the inventions of zealous champions of the Shintō religion into a belief in the so-called "Divine Characters," by them alleged to have been invented by the Japanese gods and to have been used by the Japanese people prior to the introduction of the Chinese ideographic writing, it must be stated precisely that all the traditions of the "Divine Age," and of the reigns of the earlier Emperors down to the third century of our era according to the received chronology, maintain a complete silence on the subject of writing materials, and records of every kind. Books are nowhere mentioned till a period confessedly posterior to the opening up of intercourse with the Asiatic continent, and the first books whose names occur are the "Lun Yü" and the "Ch'ien Tzŭ Wên,"⁵⁵ which are said to have been brought over to Japan during the reign of the Emperor Ō-jin,— ⁵⁴ A translation,—especially a literal prose translation,—is not calculated to show off to best advantage the poetry of an alien race. But even subject to this drawback, the present writer would be surprised if it were not granted that poetic fire and grace are displayed in some of the Love-Songs (for instance the third Song in Sect. XXIV and both Songs Yamato-Take's address to his "elder brother the pine-tree," and in his Death-Songs contained in Sect. LXXXIX).

according to the same chronology in the year 284 after Christ. That even this statement is antedated, is shown by the fact that the "Ch'ien Tzŭ Wên," was not written till more than two centuries later,—a fact which is worthy the attention of those who have been disposed simply to take on trust the assertions of the Japanese historians. It should likewise be mentioned that, as has already been pointed out by Mr. Aston, the Japanese terms fumi "written document," and fude "pen," are probably corruptions of foreign words.⁵⁶ The present, indeed, is not the place to discuss the whole question of the so-called "Divine Characters" which Motowori, the most patriotic as well as the most learned of the Japanese literati, dismisses in a note to the Prolegomena of his "Exposition of the Records of Ancient Matters" with the remark that they "are a late forgery over which no words need be wasted." But as this mare's nest has been imported into the discussion of the Early Japanese social state, and as the point is one on which the absolute silence of the early traditions bears such clear testimony, it was impossible to pass it by without some brief allusion.

⁵⁶ Viz. of the Chinese 文 and 筆 (in the modern Mandarin pronunciation wên and pí). Mr. Aston would seem to derive both the Japanese term fude and the Korean put independently from the Chinese 筆. The present writer thinks it more likely that the Japanese fude was borrowed mediately through the Korean put. In any case, as it regularly corresponds with the latter according to the laws of letter-change subsisting between the two languages, it will be observed that the Japanese term would still have to be considered borrowed, even if the derivation of put from 筆 had to be abandoned; for we can hardly suppose Korean and Japanese to have independently selected the same root to denote such a thing as a "pen." As to the correctness of the derivation of fumi from 文, there can be little doubt, and it had long ago struck even the Japanese themselves, who are not prompt to acknowledge such loans. They usually derive fude from fumi-te, "document hand," and thus again we are brought back to the Chinese 文 as the origin of the Japanese word for "pen."

V. RELIGIOUS AND POLITICAL IDEAS OF THE EARLY JAPANESE, BEGINNINGS OF THE JAPANESE NATION, AND CREDIBILITY OF THE NATIONAL RECORDS.

The religious beliefs of the modern upholders of Shintō ⁵⁷ may be ascertained without much difficulty by a perusal of the works of the leaders of the movement which has endeavoured during the last century and a half to destroy the influence of Buddhism and of the Chinese philosophy, and which has latterly succeeded to some extent in supplanting those two foreign systems. But in Japan, as elsewhere, it has been impossible for men really to turn back a thousand years in religious thought and act; and when we try to discover the primitive opinions that were entertained by the Japanese people prior to the introduction of the Chinese culture, we are met by difficulties that at first seem insuperable. The documents are scanty, and the modern commentaries untrustworthy, for they are all written under the influence of a preconceived opinion. Moreover, the problem is apparently complicated by a mixture of races and mythologies, and by a filtering in of Chinese ideas previous to the compilation of documents of any sort, though these are considerations which have hitherto scarcely been taken into account by foreigners, and are designedly neglected and obscured by such narrowly patriotic native writers as Motowori and Hirata.

In the political field the difficulties are not less, but rather greater; for when once the Imperial house and the centralized Japanese polity, as we know it from the sixth or seventh century of our era downwards, became fully established, it was but too clearly in the interest of the powers that be to efface as far as possible the trace of different government arrangements which may have preceded them, and to cause it to be believed that, as things were then, so had they always been. The Emperor Tem-mu, with his anxiety to amend "the deviations from truth and the empty falsehoods" of the historical documents preserved by the various families, and the author of the "Chronicles of Japan" with his elaborate system of fictitious dates, recur to our minds, and we ask ourselves to what extent similar garblings of history,—sometimes unintentional,—may have gone on during earlier ages, when there was even less to check them than there was in the eighth century. If, therefore, the translator here gives expression to a few opinions founded chiefly on a careful study of the text of the "Records of Ancient Matters" helped out by a study of the "Chronicles of Japan," he would be understood to do so with great diffidence, especially with regard to his few (so to speak) constructive remarks. As to the destructive side of the criticism, there need be less hesitation; for the old histories bear evidence too conclusively against themselves for it to be possible for the earlier portions of them, at least, to stand the test of sober investigation. Before endeavouring to piece together the little that is found in the "Records" to illustrate the beliefs of Archaic Japanese times, it will be necessary, at the risk of dullness, to give a summary of the old traditions as they lie before us in their entirety, after which will be hazarded a few speculations on the subject of the earlier tribes which combined to form the Japanese people; for the four questions of religious beliefs, of political arrangements, of race, and of the credibility of documents, all hang closely together and, properly speaking, form but one highly complex problem.

⁵⁷ The Chinese characters used to write this word are 神道, which signify the "Way of the Gods." The term was adopted in order to distinguish the old native beliefs from Buddhism and Confucianism.

Greatly condensed, the Early Japanese traditions amount to this: After an indefinitely long period, during which were born a number of abstract deities, who are differently enumerated in the "Records" and in the "Chronicles," two of these deities, a brother and sister named Izanagi and Izanami (i.e., the "Male who Invites" and the "Female Who Invites"), are united in marriage, and give birth to the various islands of the Japanese archipelago. When they have finished producing islands, they proceed to the production of a large number of gods and goddesses, many of whom correspond to what we should call personifications of the powers of nature, though personification is a word which, in its legitimate acceptations, is foreign to the Japanese mind. The birth of the Fire-God causes Izanami's death, and the most striking episode of the whole mythology then ensues, when her husband, Orpheus-like, visits her in the under-world to implore her to return to him. She would willingly do so, and bids him wait while she consults with the deities of the place. But he, impatient at her long tarrying, breaks off one of the end-teeth of the comb stuck in the left bunch of his hair, lights it and goes in, only to find her a hideous mass of corruption, in whose midst are seated the eight Gods of Thunder. This episode ends with the deification of three peaches ⁵⁸ who had assisted him in his retreat before the armies of the under-world, and with bitter words exchanged between him and his wife, who herself pursues him as far as the "Even Pass of Hades."

Returning to Himuka in south-western Japan, Izanagi purifies himself by bathing in a stream, and, as he does so, fresh deities are born from each article of clothing that he throws down on the river-bank, and from each part of his person. One of these deities was the Sun-Goddess, who was born from his left eye, while the Moon-God sprang from his right eye, and the last born of all, Susa-no-Wo, whose name the translator renders by "the Impetuous Male," was born from his nose. Between these three children their father divides the inheritance of the universe.

At this point the story loses its unity. The Moon-God is no more heard of, and the traditions concerning the Sun-Goddess and those concerning the "Impetuous Male Deity" diverge in a manner which is productive of inconsistencies in the remainder of the mythology. The Sun-Goddess and the "Impetuous Male Deity" have a violent quarrel, and at last the latter breaks a hole in the roof of the hall in Heaven where his sister is sitting at work with the celestial weaving-maidens, and through it lets fall "a heavenly piebald horse which he had flayed with a backward flaying." The consequences of this act were so disastrous, that the Sun-Goddess withdrew for a season into a cave, from which the rest of the eight hundred myriad (according to the "Chronicles" eighty myriad) deities with difficulty allured her. The "Impetuous Male Deity" was thereupon banished, and the Sun-Goddess remained mistress of the field. Yet, strange to say, she thenceforward retires into the background, and the most bulky section of the mythology consists of stories concerning the "Impetuous Male Deity" and his descendants, who are represented as the monarchs of Japan, or rather of the province of Idzumo. The "Impetuous Male Deity" himself, whom his father had charged with the dominion of the sea, never assumes that rule, but first has a curiously told amorous adventure and an encounter with an eight-forked serpent in Idzumo, and afterwards reappears as the capricious and filthy deity of Hades, who however seems to retain some power over the land of the living, as he invests his descendant of the sixth generation with the sovereignty of Japan. Of this latter personage a whole cycle of stories is told, all centering in Idzumo. We learn of his conversations with a hare and with a mouse, of the prowess and cleverness which he displayed on the occasion of a visit to his ancestor in Hades, which is in this cycle of traditions a much less mysterious place than the Hades visited by Izanagi, of his amours, of his triumph over his eighty brethren, of his reconciliation with his jealous empress, and of his numerous descendants, many of whom have names that are particularly difficult of comprehension. We hear too in a tradition, which ends in a pointless manner, of a microscopic deity who comes across the sea to ask this monarch of Idzumo to share the sovereignty with him.

This last-mentioned legend repeats itself in the sequel. The Sun-Goddess, who on her second appearance is constantly represented as acting in concert with the "High August Producing Wondrous Deity,"—one of the abstractions mentioned at the commencement of the "Records,"—resolves to bestow the sovereignty of Japan on a child of whom it is doubtful whether he were hers or that of her brother the "Impetuous Male Deity." Three embassies are sent from Heaven to Idzumo to arrange matters, but it is only a fourth that is successful, the final ambassadors obtaining the submission of the monarch or deity of Idzumo, who surrenders his sovereignty and promises to serve the new dynasty (apparently in the under-world), if a palace or temple be built for him and he be appropriately worshipped. Thereupon the child of the deity whom the Sun-Goddess had originally wished to make sovereign of Japan, descends to earth,—not to Idzumo in the north-west, be it mentioned, as the logical sequence of the story would lead one to expect,—but to the peak of a mountain in the south-western island of Kiushiu.

Here follows a quaint tale accounting for the old appearance of the bèche-le-mer, and another to account for the shortness of the lives of mortals, after which we are told of the birth under peculiar circumstances of the heaven-descended deity's three sons. Two of these, Ho-deri and Howori, whose names may be Englished as "Fire-Shine" and "Fire-Subside," are the heroes of a very curious legend, which includes an elaborate account of a visit paid by the latter to the palace of the God of Ocean, and of a curse or spell which gained for him the victory over his elder brother, and enabled him to dwell peacefully in his palace at Takachiho for the space of five hundred and eighty years,—the first statement resembling a date which the "Records" contain. This personage's son married his own aunt, and was the father of four children, one of whom "treading on the crest of the waves, crossed over to the Eternal Land," while a second "went into the sea plain," and the two others moved eastward, fighting with the chiefs of Kibi and Yamato, having adventures with gods both with and without tails, being assisted by a miraculous sword and a gigantic crow, and naming the various places they passed through after incidents in their own career, as "the Impetuous Male" and other divine personages had done before them. One of these brothers was Kamu-Yamato-Ihare-Biko, who (the other having died before him) was first given the title of Jim-mu Ten-no more than fourteen, centuries after the date which in the "Chronicles" is assigned as that of his decease.

Henceforth Yamato, which had scarcely been mentioned before, and the provinces adjacent to it become the centre of the story, and Idzumo again emerges into importance. A very indecent love-tale forms a bridge which unites the two fragments of the mythology; and the "Great Deity of Miwa," who is identified with the deposed monarch of Idzumo, appears on the scene. Indeed during the rest of the story this "Great Deity of Miwa," and his colleague the "Small August Deity" (Sukuna-Mi-Kami ⁵⁹), the deity Izasa-Wake, the three Water-Gods of Sumi, and the "Great Deity of Kadzuraki," of whom there is so striking a mention in Sect. CLVIII, form, with the Sun-Goddess and with a certain divine sword preserved at the temple of Isonokami in Yamato, the only objects of worship specially named, the other gods and goddesses being no more heard of. This portion of the story is closed by an account of the troubles which inaugurated the reign of Jim-mu's successor, Sui-sei, and then occurs a blank of (according to the accepted chronology) five hundred years, during which absolutely nothing is told us excepting dreary genealogies, the place where each sovereign dwelt and where he was buried, and the age to which he lived,—this after the minute details which had previously been given concerning the successive gods or monarchs down to Sui-sei inclusive. It should likewise be noted that the average age of the first seventeen monarchs (counting Jim-mu Ten-nō as the first according to received ideas) is nearly 96 years if we follow the "Records," and over a hundred if we follow the accepted chronology which is based chiefly on the constantly divergent statements contained in the "Chronicles." The age of several of the monarchs exceeds 120 years. ⁶⁰

The above-mentioned lapse of an almost blank period, of five centuries brings us to the reign of the Emperor known to history by the name of Sū-jin, whose life of one hundred and sixty-eight years (one hundred and twenty according to the "Chronicles") is supposed to have immediately preceded the Christian era. In this reign the former monarch of Idzumo or god of Miwa again appears and produces a pestilence, of the manner of staying which Sū-jin is warned in a dream, while a curious but highly indecent episode tells us how a person called Oho-Taka-Ne-Ko was known to be a son of the deity in question, and was therefore appointed high-priest of his temple. In the ensuing reign an elaborate legend, involving a variety of circumstances as miraculous as any in the earlier portion of the mythology, again centres in the necessity of pacifying the great god of Idzumo; and this, with details of internecine strife in the Imperial family, of the sovereign's amours, and of the importation of the orange from the "Eternal Land," brings us to the cycle of traditions of which Yamato-Take, a son of the Emperor Kei-kō, is the hero. This prince, after slaying one of his brothers in the privy, accomplishes the task of subduing both western and eastern Japan; and, notwithstanding certain details which are unsavoury to the European taste, his story, taken as a whole, is one of the most striking in the book. He performs marvels of valour, disguises himself as a woman to slay the brigands, is the possessor of a magic sword and fire-striker, has a devoted wife who stills the fury of the waves by sitting down upon their surface, has encounters with a deer and with a boar who are really gods in disguise, and finally dies on his way westward before he can reach his home in Yamato. His death is followed by a highly mythological account of the laying to rest of the white bird into which he ended by being transformed.

The succeeding reign is a blank, and the next after that transports us without a word of warning to quite another scene. The sovereign's home is now in Tsukushi, the south-western island of the Japanese archipelago, and four of the gods, through the medium of the sovereign's wife, who is known to history as the Empress Jin-gō, reveal the existence of the land of Korea, of which, however, this is not the first mention. The Emperor disbelieves the divine message, and is punished by death for his incredulity. But the Empress, after a special consultation between her prime minister and the gods, and the performance of various religious ceremonies, marshals her fleet, and, with the assistance of the fishes both great and small and of a miraculous wave, reaches Shirai ⁶¹ (one of the ancient divisions of Korea), and subdues it. She then returns to Japan, the legend ending with a curiously naive tale of how she sat a-fishing one day on a shoal in the river Wo-gawa in Tsukushi with threads picked out of her skirt for lines.

⁵⁹ In Sect. XXVII, where this deity is first mentioned, he is called Sukuna Biko-Na-no-Kami, the "Little Prince the Renowned Deity."

The next section shows her going up by sea to Yamato,—another joint in the story, by means of which [51] the Yamato cycle of legends and the Tsukushi cycle are brought into apparent unity. The "Chronicles of Japan" have even improved upon this by making Jingō's husbands dwell in Yamato at the commencement of his reign and only remove to Tsukushi later, so that if the less elaborated "Records" had not been preserved, the two threads of the tradition would have been still more difficult to unravel. The Empress's army defeats the troops raised by the native kings or princes, who are represented as her step-sons; and from that time forward the story runs on in a single channel and always centres in Yamato. China likewise is now first mentioned, books are said to have been brought over from the mainland, and we hear of the gradual introduction of various useful arts. Even the annals of the reign of O-jin however, during which this civilizing impulse from abroad is said to have commenced, are not free from details as miraculous as any in the earlier portions of the book. Indeed Sects. CXIV-CXVI of the following translation, which form part of the narrative of his reign, are occupied with the recital of one of the most fanciful tales of the whole mythology. The monarch himself is said to have lived a hundred and thirty years, while his successor lived eighty-three (according to the "Chronicles," O-jin lived a hundred and ten and his successor Nin-toku reigned eighty-seven years). It is not till the next reign that the miraculous ceases, a fact which significantly coincides with the reign in which, according to a statement in the "Chronicles," "historiographers were first appointed to all the provinces to record words and events and forward archives from all directions." This brings us to the commencement of the fifth century of our era, just three centuries before the compilation of our histories, but only two centuries before the compilation of the first history of which mention has been preserved. From that time the story in the "Records," though not well told, gives us some very curious pictures, and reads as if it were reliable. It is tolerably full for a few reigns, after which it again dwindles into mere genealogies, carrying us down to the commencement of the seventh century. The "Chronicles," on the contrary, give us full details down to A.D. 701, that is to within nineteen years of the date of their compilation.

The reader who has followed this summary, or who will take the trouble to read through the whole text for himself will perceive that there is no break in the story,—at least no chronological break,—and no break between the fabulous and the real, unless indeed it be at the commencement of the fifth century of our era, i.e. more than a thousand years later than the date usually accepted as the commencement of genuine Japanese history. The only breaks are,—not chronological,—but topographical.

This fact of the continuity of the Japanese mythology and history has been fully recognized by the leading native commentators, whose opinions are those considered orthodox by modern Shintoists; and they draw from it the conclusion that everything in the standard national histories must be equally accepted as literal truth. All persons however cannot force their minds into the limits of such a belief; and early in the last century a celebrated writer and thinker, Arawi Hakuseki, published a work in which, while accepting the native mythology as an authentic chronicle of events, he did so with the reservation of proving to his own satisfaction that all the miraculous portions thereof were allegories, and the gods only men under another name. In this particular, the elasticity of the Japanese word for "deity," kami, which has already been noticed, stood the eastern Euhemerus in good stead. Some of his explanations are however extremely comical, and it is evident that such a system enables the person who uses it to prove whatever he has a mind to.⁶² In the present century a diluted form of the same theory was adopted by Tachibana no Moribe, who, although endeavouring to remain an orthodox Shintoist, yet decided that some of the (so to speak) uselessly miraculous incidents need not be believed in as revealed truth. Such, for instance, are the story of the speaking mouse, and that of Izanagi's head-dress turning into a bunch of grapes. He accounts for many of these details by the supposition that they are what he calls wosana-goto, i.e. "child-like words," and thinks that they were invented for the sake of fixing the story in the minds of children, and are not binding on modern adults as articles of faith. He is also willing to allow that some passages show traces of Chinese influence, and he blames Motowori's uncompromising championship of every iota of the existing text of the "Records of Ancient Matters." As belonging to this same school of what may perhaps be termed "rationalistic believers" in Japanese mythology, a contemporary Christian writer, Mr. Takahashi Gorō, must also be mentioned. Treading in the foot-steps of Arawi Hakuseki, but bringing to bear on the legends of his own country some knowledge of the mythology of other lands, he for instance explains the traditions of the Sun-Goddess and of the Eight-Forked Serpent of Yamada by postulating the existence of an ancient queen called Sun, whose brother, after having been banished from her realm for his improper behaviour, killed an enemy whose name was Serpent, etc., while such statements as that the microscopic deity who came over the waves to share the sovereignty of Idzumo would not tell his name, are explained by the assertion that, being a foreigner, he was unintelligible for some time until he had learnt the language. It is certainly strange that such theorists should not see that they are undermining with one hand that which they endeavour to prop up with the other, and that their own individual fancy is made by them the sole standard of historic truth. Yet Mr. Takahashi confidently asserts that "his explanations have nothing forced or fanciful" in them, and that "they cannot fail to solve the doubts even of the greatest of doubters."⁶³

The general habit of the more sceptical Japanese of the present day,—i.e. of ninety-nine out of every hundred of the educated,—seems to be to reject, or at least to ignore, the history of the gods, while implicitly accepting the history of the emperors from Jim-mu downwards; and in so doing they have been followed with but little reserve by most Europeans, almanacs, histories and cyclopædias all continuing to repeat on the antiquated authority of such writers as Kaempfer and Titsingh, that Japan possesses an authentic history covering more than two thousand years, while Siebold and Hoffmann even go the length of discussing the hour of Jim-mu's accession in the year 660 B.C.! This is the attitude of mind now sanctioned by the governing class. Thus, in the historical compilations used at text-books in the schools, the stories of the gods,—that is to say the Japanese traditions down to Jim-mu exclusive,—are either passed over in silence or dismissed in a few sentences, while the annals of the human sovereigns,—that is to say the Japanese traditions from Jim-mu inclusive,—are treated precisely as if the events therein related had happened yesterday, and were as incontrovertibly historical as later statements, for which there is contemporary evidence. The same plan is pursued elsewhere in official publications. Thus, to take out one example among many, the Imperial Commissioners to the Vienna Exhibition, in their "Notice sur l'Empire du Japon," tell us that "L'histoire de la dynastie impériale remonte très-haut. L'obscurité entoure ses débuts, vu l'absence de documents réguliers ou d'un calendrier parfait. Le premier Empereur de la dynastie présente, dont il reste des annales dignes de confiance, est Jin-mou-ten-nō ⁶⁴ qui organisa un soulèvement dans la province de Hiuga, marcha à l'Est avec ses compagnons, fonda sa capitale dans la vallée de Kashihara dans le Yamato, et monta sur le trône comme Empereur. C'est de cet Empereur que descend, par une succession régulière, la présente famille régnante du Japon. C'est de l'année de l'avènement de Jin-mou-ten-nō que date l'ère japonaise (Année 1—660 avant Jésus-Christ)."

As for the ère Japonaise mentioned by the commissioners, it may be permitted to observe that it was only introduced by an edict dated 15th Dec., 1872⁶⁵ that is to say just a fortnight before the publication of their report. And this era, this accession, is confidently placed thirteen or fourteen centuries before the first history which records it was written, nine centuries before (at the earliest computation) the art of writing was introduced into the country, and on the sole authority of books teeming with miraculous legends!! Does such a proceeding need any comment after once being formulated in precise terms, and can any unprejudiced person continue to accept the early Japanese chronology and the first thousand years of the so-called history of Japan.

Leaving this discussion, let us now see whether any information relative to the early religious and political state of the Japanese can be gleaned from the pages of the "Records" and of the "Chronicles." There are fragments of information,—fragments of two sorts,—some namely of clear import, others which are rather a matter for inference and for argument. Let us take the positive fragments first—the notice as to Cosmological ideas, dreams, prayers, etc.

The first thing that strikes the student is that what, for want of a more appropriate name, we must call the religion of the Early Japanese, was not an organized religion. We can discover in it nothing corresponding to the body of dogma, the code of morals, and the sacred book authoritatively enforcing both, with which we are familiar in civilized religions, such as Buddhism, Christianity, and Islam. What we find is a bundle of miscellaneous superstitions rather than a co-ordinated system. Dreams evidently were credited with great importance, the future being supposed to be foretold in them, and the will of the gods made known. Sometimes even an actual object, such as a wonderful sword, was sent down in a dream, thus to our ideas mixing the material with the spiritual. The subject did not, however, present itself in that light to the Early Japanese, to whom there was evidently but one order of phenomena,—what we should call the natural order. Heaven, or rather the Sky, was an actual place,—not more ethereal than earth, nor thought of as the abode of the blessed after death,—but simply "high plain" situated above Japan and communicating with Japan by a bridge or ladder, and forming the residence of some of those powerful personages called kami,—a word which we must make shift to translate by "god" or a "goddess," or "deity." An arrow shot from earth could reach Heaven, and make a hole in it. There was at least one mountain in Heaven, and one river with a broad stony bed like those with which the traveller in Japan becomes familiar, one or two caves, one or more wells, and animals, and trees. There is, however, some confusion as to the mountain,—the celebrated Mount Kagu,—for there is one of that name in the Province of Yamato.

Some of the gods dwelt here on earth, or descended hither from Heaven, and had children by human women. Such, for instance, was the emperor Jim-mu's great-grandfather. Some few gods had tails or were otherwise personally remarkable; and "savage deities" are often mentioned as inhabiting certain portions of Japan, both in the so-called "Divine Age" and during the reigns of the human emperors down to a time corresponding, according to the generally received chronology, with the first or second century of the Christian era. The human emperors themselves, moreover, were sometimes spoken of as deities, and even made personal use of that designation. The gods occasionally transformed themselves into animals, and at other times simple tangible objects were called gods,—or at least they were called kami; for the gulf separating the Japanese from the English term can never be too often recalled to mind. The word kami, as previously mentioned, properly signifies "superior," and it would be putting more into it than it really implies to say that the Early Japanese "deified,"—in our sense of the verb to "deify,"—the peaches which Izanagi used to pelt his assailants with, or any other natural objects whatsoever. It would, indeed, be to, attribute to them a flight of imagination of which they were not capable, and a habit of personification not in accordance with the genius of their language. Some of the gods are mentioned collectively as "bad Deities like unto the flies in the fifth moon"; but there is nothing approaching a systematic division into good spirits and bad spirits. In fact the word "spirit" itself is not applicable at all to the gods of Archaic Japan. They were, like the gods of Greece, conceived of only as more powerful human beings. They were born, and some of them died, though here again there is inconsistency, as the death of some of them is mentioned in a manner leading one to suppose that they were conceived of as being then at an end, whereas in other cases such death seems simply to denote transference to Hades, or to what is called "the One Road," which is believed to be a synonym for Hades. Sometimes, again, a journey to Hades is undertaken by a god without any reference to his death. Nothing, indeed, could be less consistent than the various details.

Hades ⁶⁶ itself is another instance of this inconsistency. In the legend of Oho-Kuni-Nushi (the "Master of the Great Land"),—one of the Idzumo cycle of legends,—Hades is described exactly as if it were part of the land of the living, or exactly as if it were Heaven, which indeed comes to the same thing. It has its trees, its houses, its family quarrels, etc., etc. In the legend of Izanagi, on the other hand, Hades means simply the abode of horrible putrefaction and of the vindictive dead, and is fitly described by the god himself who had ventured thither as "a hideous and polluted land." The only point in which the legends agree is in placing between the upper earth and Hades a barrier called the "Even Pass (or Hill) of Hades." The state of the dead in general is nowhere alluded to, nor are the dying ever made to refer to a future world, whether good or evil.

The objects of worship were of course the gods, or some of them. It has already been stated that during the later portions of the story, whose scene is laid almost exclusively on earth, the Sun-Goddess, the deity Izasa-Wake, the Divine Sword of Isonokami, the Small August Deity (Sukuna-Mi-Kami), the "Great Gods" of Miwa and of Kadzuraki and the three Water-Deities of Sumi, alone are mentioned as having been specially worshipped. Of these the first and the last appear together, forming a sort of quaternion, while the other five appear singly and have no connection with each other. The deities of the mountains, the deities of the rivers, the deities of the sea, etc., are also mentioned in the aggregate, as are likewise the heavenly deities and the earthly deities; and the Empress Jin-gō is represented as conciliating them all previous to her departure for Korea by putting into a gourd the ashes "of a maki tree,"⁶⁷ and likewise making a quantity of chopsticks and also "of leaf-platters, and scattering them all on the waves."

This brings us to the subject of religious rites,—a subject on which we long for fuller information than the texts afford.⁶⁸ That the conciliatory offerings made to the gods were of a miscellaneous nature will be expected from the quotation just made. Nevertheless, a very natural method was in the main followed; for the people offered the things by which they themselves set most store, as we bear at a late period of the poet Tsurayuki, when in a storm at sea, flinging his mirror into the waves because he had but one. The Early Japanese made offerings of two kinds of cloth, one being hempen cloth and the other cloth manufactured from the bark of the paper mulberry, offerings very precious in their eyes, but which have in modern times been allowed to degenerate into useless strips of paper. They likewise offered shields, spears, and other things. Food was offered both to the gods and to the dead; indeed, the palace or tomb of the dead monarch and the temple of the god cannot always be distinguished from each other, and, as has already been mentioned, the Japanese use the same word miya for "palace" and for "temple." Etymologically signifying "august house," it is naturally susceptible of what are to us two distinct meanings.

With but one exception,⁶⁹ the "Records" do not give us the words of any prayers (or, as the Japanese term norito has elsewhere been translated, "rituals.") Conversations with the gods are indeed detailed, but no devotional utterances. Fortunately, however, a number of very ancient prayers have been preserved in other books, and translations of some of them by Mr. Satow will be found scattered through the volumes of the Transactions of this Society. They consist mostly of declarations of praise and statements of offerings made, either in return for favours received or conditionally on favours being granted. They are all in prose, and hymns do not seem to have been in use.

⁶⁷ Podocarpus macrophylla.

⁶⁸ The least meagre account will be found in Sects. XVI and XXXII.

⁶⁹ To be found at the end of Sect. XXXII.

Indeed of the hundred and eleven Songs preserved in the "Records," not one has any religious reference.

The sacred rite of which most frequent mention is made is purification by water. Trial by hot water is also alluded to in both histories, but not till a time confessedly posterior to the commencement of intercourse with the mainland. We likewise hear of compacts occasionally entered into with a god, and somewhat resembling our European wager, oath, or curse. Priests are spoken of in a few passages, but without any details. We do not hear of their functions being in any way mediatorial, and the impression conveyed is that they did not exist in very early times as a separate class. When they did come into existence, the profession soon became hereditary, according to the general tendency in Japan towards the hereditability of offices and occupations.

Miscellaneous superstitions crop up in many places. Some of these were evidently obsolescent or unintelligible at the time when the legends crystallized into their present shape, and stories are told purporting to give their origin. Thus we learn either in the "Records" or in the "Chronicles," or in both works, why it is unlucky to use only one light, to break off the teeth of a comb at night-time, and to enter the house with straw hat and rain-coat on. The word-wide dread of going against the sun is connected with the Jim-mu legend, and recurs elsewhere.⁷⁰ We also hear of charms,—for instance, of the wondrous "Herb-Quelling Sabre" found by Susa-no-Wo (the "Impetuous Male Deity") inside a serpent's tail and still preserved as one of the Imperial regalia. Other such charms were the "tide-flowing jewel" and "tide-ebbing jewel," that obtained for Jim-mu's grandfather the victory over his elder brother, together with the fishhook which figures so largely in the same legend.⁷¹ Divination by means of the shoulder-blade of a stag was a favourite means of ascertaining the will of the gods. Sometimes also human beings seem to have been credited in a vague manner with the power of prophetic utterance. Earthenware pots were buried at the point of his departure by an intending traveller. In a fight the initial arrow was regarded with superstitious awe. The great precautions with which the Empress Jin-gō is said to have set out on her expedition to Korea have already been alluded to, and indeed the commencement of any action or enterprise seems to have had special importance attributed to it.

To conclude this survey of the religious beliefs of the Early Japanese by referring, as was clone in the case of the arts of life, to certain notable features which are conspicuous by their absence, attention may be called to the fact that there is no tradition of a deluge, no testimony to any effect produced on the imagination by the earthquakes from which the Japanese islanders suffer such constant alarms, no trace of star-worship, no notion of incarnation or of transmigration. This last remark goes to show that the Japanese mythology had assumed its present shape before the first echo of Buddhism reverberated on these shores. But the absence of any tradition of a deluge or inundation is still more remarkable, both because such catastrophes are likely to occur occasionally in all lands, and because the imagination of most nations seems to have been greatly impressed by their occurrence. Moreover what is specifically known to us as the Deluge has been lately claimed as an ancient Altaïc myth. Yet here we have the oldest of the undoubtedly Altaïc nations without any legend of the kind. As for the neglect of the stars, round whose names the imagination of other races has twined such fanciful conceits, it is as characteristic of Modern as of Archaic Japan. The Chinese designations of the constellations, and some few Chinese legends relating to them, have been borrowed in historic times; but no Japanese writer has ever thought of looking in the stars for "the poetry of heaven." Another detail worthy of mention is that the number seven, which in so many countries has been considered sacred, is here not prominent in any way, its place being taken by eight. Thus we have Eight Great Islands, an Eight-forked Serpent, a beard Eighty Hand-breadths long, a God named "Eight Thousand Spears," Eighty or Eight Hundred Myriads of Deities, etc., etc. The commentators think it necessary to tell us that all these eights and eighties need not be taken literally, as they simply mean a great number. The fact remains that the number eight had, for some unknown reason, a special significance attached to it; and as the documents which mention eight also mention nine and ten, besides higher numbers, and as in some test cases, such as that of the Eight Great Islands, each of the eight is separately enumerated, it is plain that when the Early Japanese said eight they meant eight, though they may doubtless have used that number in a vague manner, as we do a dozen, a hundred, and a thousand.

How glaringly different all this is from the fanciful accounts of Shintō that have been given by some recent popular writers calls for no comment. Thus one of them, whom another quotes as an authority, ⁷² tells us that Shintō "consists in the belief that the productive ethereal spirit being expanded through the whole universe, every part is in some degree impregnated with it, and therefore every part is in some measure the seat of the deity; whence local gods and goddesses are everywhere worshipped, and consequently multiplied without end. Like the ancient Romans and the Greeks, they acknowledge a Supreme Being, the first, the supreme, the intellectual, by which men have been reclaimed from rudeness and barbarism to elegance and refinement, and been taught through privileged men and women, not only to live with more comfort, but to die with better hopes."(!) Truly, when one peruses such utterly groundless assertions,—for that here quoted is but one among many, one is tempted to believe that the nineteenth century must form part of the early mythopœic age.

With regard to the question of government, we learn little beyond such vague statements as that to so-and-so was yielded by his eighty brethren the sovereignty of the land of Idzumo, or that Izanagi divided the dominion over all things between his three children, bestowing on one the "Plain of High Heaven," on another the Dominion of the Night, and on the third the "Sea-Plain." But we do not in the earlier legends see such sovereignty actually administered. The heavenly gods seem rather to have been conceived as forming a sort of commonwealth, who decided things by meeting together in counsel in the stony bed of the "River of Heaven," and taking the advice of the shrewdest of their number. Indeed the various divine assemblies, to which the story in the "Records" and "Chronicles" introduces us, remind us of nothing so much as of the village assemblies of primitive tribes in many parts of the world, where the cleverness of one and the general willingness to follow his suggestions fill the place of the more definite organization of later times.

Descending from heaven to earth, we find little during the so-called "Divine Age" but stories of isolated individuals and families; and it is not till the narrative of the wars of the earlier Emperors commences, that any kind of political organization comes into view. Then at once we hear of chieftains in every locality, who lead their men to battle, and are seemingly the sole depositories of power, each in his microscopic sphere. The legend of Jim-mu itself, however, is sufficient to show that autocracy, as we understand it, was not characteristic of the government of the Tsukushi tribes; for Jim-mu and his brother, until the latter's death, are represented as joint chieftains of their host. Similarly we find that the "Territorial Owners" of Yamato, and the "Rulers" of Idzumo, whom Jim-mu or his successors are said to have subjugated, are constantly spoken of in the Plural, as if to intimate that they exerted a divided sovereignty. During the whole of the so-called "Human Age" we meet, both in parts of the country which were already subject to the Imperial rule and in others which were not yet annexed, with local magnates bearing these same titles of "Territorial Owners," "Rulers," "Chiefs," etc.; and the impression left on the mind is that in early historical times the sovereign's power was not exercised directly over all parts of Japan, but that in many cases the local chieftains continued to hold sway though owning some sort of allegiance to the emperor in Yamato, while in others the emperor was strong enough to depose these local rulers, and to put in their place his own kindred or retainers, who however exercised unlimited authority in their own districts, and used the same titles as had been borne by the former native rulers,—that, in fact, the government was feudal rather than centralized. This characteristic of the political organization of Early Japan has not altogether escaped the attention of the native commentators. Indeed the great Shintō scholar Hirata not only recognizes the fact, but endeavours to prove that the system of centralization which obtained during the eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, and part of the twelfth centuries, and which has been revived in our own day, is nothing but an imitation of the Chinese bureaucratic system; and he asserts that an organized feudalism, similar to that which existed from the twelfth century down to the year 1867, was the sole really ancient and national Japanese form of government. The translator cannot follow Hirata to such lengths, as he sees no evidence in the early histories of the intricate organization of mediaeval Japan. But that, beyond the immediate limits of the Imperial domain, the government resembled feudalism rather than centralization seems indisputable. It is also true that the seventh century witnessed a sudden move in the direction of bureaucratic organization, many of the titles which had up till that time denoted actual Provincial chieftains being then either suppressed, or else allowed to sink into mere "gentile names." Another remark which is suggested by a careful perusal of the two ancient histories is that the Imperial succession was in early historical times very irregular. Strange gaps occur as late as the sixth century of our era; and even when it was one of the children who inherited his father's throne, that child was rarely the eldest son.

What now are we to gather from its analysis of the religious and political features revealed to us by a study of the books containing the Early Japanese traditions as to the still remoter history and tribal divisions of Japan, and as to the origin of the Japanese legends? Very little that is certain, perhaps; but, in the opinion of the present writer, two or three interesting probabilities.

In view of the multiplicity of gods and the complications of the so-called historical traditions, he thinks that it would be a priori difficult to believe that the development of Japanese civilization should have run on in a single stream broken only in the third century by the commencement of intercourse with the mainland of Asia. We are, however, not left to such a merely theoretical consideration. There are clear indications of there having been three centres of legendary cycles, three streams which mixed together to form the Japan which meets us at the dawn of authentic history in the fifth century of Our era. One of these centres,—the most important in the mythology,—is Idzumo; the second is Yamato: the third is Tsukushi, called in modern times Kiushiu. Eastern and Northern Japan count for nothing; indeed, much of the North-East and North was, down to comparatively recent times, occupied by the barbarous Ainos or, as they are called by the Japanese, Yemishi, Yebisu, or Yezo. That the legends or traditions derived from the three parts of the country here mentioned accord but imperfectly together is an opinion which has already been alluded to, and upon which light may perhaps be thrown by a more thorough shifting of the myths and beliefs classified according to this three-fold system. The question of the ancient division of Japan into several independent states is, however, not completely a matter of [64] opinion. For we have in the "Shan Hai Ching" ⁷³ a positive statement concerning a Northern and a Southern Yamato (倭), and the Chinese annals of both the Han dynasties tell us of the division of the country into a much larger number of kingdoms, of which, according to the annals of the later Han dynasty, Yamato (邪馬臺) was the most powerful. A later official Chinese historian also tells us that Jih-pên (日本, our Japan) and Yamato had been two different states, and that Jih-pên was reported to have swallowed up Yamato. By Jih-pên the author evidently meant to speak of the island of Tsukushi or of part of it. That the Chinese were fairly well acquainted with Japan is shown by the fact of there being in the old Chinese literature more than one mention of "the country of the hairy people beyond the mountains in the East and North."—that is of the Yemishi or Ainos. No Chinese book would seem to mention Idzumo as having formed a separate country; and this evidence must be allowed its whole weight. It is possible, of course, that Idzumo may have been incorporated with Yamato before the conquest of the latter by the Tsukushi people, and in this case some of the inconsistencies of the history may be traceable to a confusion of the traditions concerning the conquest of Idzumo by Yamato and of those concerning the conquest of Yamato by Tsukushi. Perhaps too (for so almost impossible a task is it to reconstruct history out of legend) there may not, after all, be sufficient warrant for believing in the former existence of Idzumo as a separate state, though it certainly seems hard to account otherwise for the peculiar place that Idzumo occupies in mythic story. In any case, and whatever light may hereafter be thrown on this very obscure question, it must be remembered that, so far as clear native documentary evidence reaches, 400 A.D. is approximately the highest limit of reliable Japanese history. Beyond that date we are at once confronted with the miraculous; and if any facts relative to earlier Japan are to be extracted from the pages of the "Records" and "Chronicles," it must be by a process very different from that of simply reading and taking their assertions upon trust.

With regard to the origin, or rather to the significance, of the clearly fanciful portions of the Japanese legends, the question here mooted as to the probability of the Japanese mythology being a mixed one warns us to exercise more than usual caution in endeavouring to interpret it. In fact, it bids us wait to interpret it until such time as further research shall have shown which legends belong together. For if they are of heterogeneous origin, it is hopeless to attempt to establish a genealogical tree of the gods, and the very phrase so often heard in discussions on this subject,—“the original religious beliefs of the Japanese,”—ceases to have any precise meaning; for different beliefs may have been equally ancient and original, but distinguished geographically by belonging to different parts of the country. Furthermore it may not be superfluous to call attention to the fact that the gods who are mentioned in the opening phrases of the histories as we now have them are not therefore necessarily the gods that were most anciently worshipped. Surely in religions, as in books, it is not often the preface that is written first. And yet this simple consideration has been constantly neglected, and, one after another, European writers having a tincture of knowledge of Japanese mythology, tell us of original Dualities, Trinities, and Supreme Deities, without so much as pausing to notice that the only two authorities in the matter,—viz., the “Records” and the “Chronicles,” differ most gravely in the lists they furnish of primary gods. If the present writer ventured to throw out a suggestion where so many random assertions have been made, it would be to the effect that the various abstractions which figure at the commencement of the “Records” and of the “Chronicles” were probably later growths, and perhaps indeed mere inventions of individuals priests. There is nothing either in the histories or in the Shintō Rituals to show that these gods, or some one or more of them, were in early days, as has been sometimes supposed, the objects of a pure worship which was afterwards obscured by the legends of Izanagi, Izanami, and their numerous descendants. On the contrary, with the exception of the deity Taka-Mi-Musu-Bi,⁷⁴ they are no sooner mentioned than they vanish into space.

Whether it is intrinsically likely that so rude a race as the Early Japanese, and a race so little given to metaphysical speculation as the Japanese at all times of their history, should have commenced by a highly abstract worship which they afterwards completely abandoned, is a question which may better be left to those whose general knowledge of early peoples and early religious beliefs entitles their decisions to respect. Their assistance likewise, even after the resolution of the Japanese mythology into its several component parts, must be called in by the specialist to help in deciding how much of this mythology should be interpreted according to the “solar” method now so popular in England, how much should be accepted as history more or less perverted, how much should be regarded as embodying attempts at explaining facts in nature, and what residue may be rejected as simple fabrication of the priesthood in comparatively late times.⁷⁵ Those who are personally acquainted with the Japanese character will probably incline to enlarge the area of the three later divisions more than would be prudent in the case of the highly imaginative Aryans, and to point out that, though some few Japanese legends portions of legends can be traced to face etymologies invented to account for names of places, and are therefore true myths in the strict acceptance of the term, yet the kindred process whereby personality is ascribed to inanimate objects,—a process which lies at the very root of Aryan mythology,—is altogether alien to the Japanese genius, and indeed to the Far-Eastern mind in general. Mythology thus originated has been aptly described as a "disease of language." But all persons are not liable to catch the same disease, neither presumably are all languages; and it is hard to see how a linguistic disease which consists in mistaking a metaphor for a reality can attack a tongue to which metaphor, even in its tamest shape, is an almost total stranger. Thus not only have Japanese Nouns no Genders and Japanese Verbs no Persons, but the names of inanimate objects cannot even be used as the subjects of Transitive Verbs. Nowhere for instance in Japanese, whether Archaic, Classical, or Modern, do we meet with such metaphorical,—mythological,—phrases as "the hot wind melts the ice," or "his conversation delights me," where the words "wind" and "conversation" are spoken of as if they were personal agents. No, the idea is invariably rendered in some other and impersonal way. Yet what a distance separates such statements, in which the ordinary European reader unacquainted with any Altaic tongue would scarcely recognize the existence of any personification at all, from the bolder flights of Aryan metaphor! Indeed, though Altaic Asia has produced very few wise men, the words of its languages closely correspond to the definition of words as "the wise man's counters;" for they are colourless and matter-of-fact, and rarely if ever carry him who speaks them above the level of sober reality. At the same time, it is patent that the sun plays some part in the Japanese mythology; and even the legend of Prince Yamato-Take, which has hitherto been generally accepted as historical or semi-historical, bears such close resemblance to legends in other countries which have been pronounced to be solar by great authorities that it may at least be worth while to subject it to investigation from that point of view. ⁷⁶ The present writer has already expressed his conviction that this matter is not one for the specialist to decide alone. He would only, from the Japanese point of view, suggest very particular caution in the application to Japanese legend of a method of interpretation which has elsewhere been fruitful of great results.

⁷⁴ I.e. the High August Producing Wondrous Deity. He is the second divine personage whose birth is mentioned in the “Records” (see Sect. I. Note 5). In the story of the creation given in the “Chronicles” he does not appear except in “One account.”

A further particular which is deserving of notice is the almost certain fact of a recension of the various traditions at a comparatively late date. This is partly shown by the amount of geographical knowledge displayed in the enumeration of the various islands supposed to have been given birth to by Izanagi and Izanami (the "Male who Invites" and the "Female who Invites"),—an amount and an exactness of knowledge unattainable at a time prior to the union under one rule of all the provinces mentioned, and significantly not extending much beyond those provinces. Such a recension may likewise be inferred,—if the opinion of the manifold origin of the Japanese traditions be accepted,—from the fairly ingenious Manner in which their component parts have generally been welded together. The way in which one or two legends,—for instance, that of the curious curse pronounced by the younger brother Ho-wori on the elder Ho-deri—are repeated more than once exemplifies a less intelligent revision. ⁷⁷ Under this heading may, perhaps, be included the legends of the conquest of Yamato by the Emperor Jim-mu and of the conquest of the same country by the Empress Jin-go, which certainly bear a suspicious likeness to each other. Of the subjection of Korea by this last-named personage it should be observed that the Chinese and Korean histories, so far as they are known to us, make no mention, and indeed the dates, as more specially given in the "Chronicles," clearly show the inconsistency of the whole story; for Jin-gō's husband, the Emperor Chiū-ai, is said to have been born in the 19th year of the reign of Seimu, i.e. in A.D. 149, while his father, Prince Yamato-Take, is said to have died in the 43rd year of Kei-kō, i.e. in A.D. 113, so that there is an interval of thirty-six years between the death of the father and the birth of the son! ⁷⁸

⁷⁶ See Sects. LXXIX-XCI.

One peculiarly interesting piece of information to be derived from a careful study of the "Records" and "Chronicles" (though it is one on which the patriotic Japanese commentators preserve complete silence) is that, at the very earliest period to which the twilight of legend stretches back, Chinese influence had already begun to make itself felt in these islands, communicating to the inhabitants both implements and ideas. This is surely a fact of very particular importance, lending, as it does, its weight to the mass of evidence which goes to prove that in almost all known cases culture has been introduced from abroad, and has not been spontaneously developed. The traces of Chinese influence are indeed not numerous, but they are unmistakable. Thus we find chopsticks mentioned both in the Idzumo and in the Kiushu legendary cycle. The legend of the birth of the Sun-Goddess and Moon-God from Izanagi's eyes is a scarcely altered fragment of the Chinese myth of P'an Ku; the superstition that peaches had assisted Izanagi to repel the hosts of Hades can almost certainly be traced to a Chinese source, and the hand-maidens of the Japanese Sun-Goddess are mentioned under the exact title of the Spinning Damsel of Chinese myth (天衣織女), while the River of Heaven (天河), which figures in the same legend; is equally Chinese,—for surely both names cannot be mere coincidences. A like remark applies to the name of the Deity of the Kitchen, and to the way in which that deity is mentioned. ⁷⁹ The art of making an intoxicating liquor is referred to in the very earliest Japanese legends. Are we to believe that its invention here was independent of its invention on the continent? In this instance moreover the old histories bear witness against themselves; for they mention this same liquor in terms showing that it was a curious rarity in what, according to the accepted chronology, corresponds to the century immediately preceding the Christian era, and again in the third century of that era. The whole story of the Sea-God's palace has a Chinese ring about it, and the "cassia-tree" (桂) mentioned in it is certainly Chinese, as are the crocodiles. That the so-called maga-tama, or "curved jewels," which figure so largely in the Japanese mythology, and with which the Early Japanese adorned themselves, were derived from China was already suspected by Mr. Henry von Siebold; and quite latterly Mr. Milne has thrown light on this subject from an altogether unexpected quarter. He has remarked, namely, that jade or the jade-like stone of which many of the maga-tama are made, is a mineral which has never yet been met with in Japan. We therefore know that some at least of the "curved jewels" or of the material for them came from the mainland, and the probability that the idea of carving these very oddly shaped ornaments was likewise imported thence gains in probability. The peculiar kind of arrow called nari-kabura (鳴鏑) is another trace of Chinese influence in the material order, and a thorough search by a competent Chinese scholar would perhaps reveal others. But enough at least has been said to show the indisputable existence of that influence. From other sources we know that the more recent mythic fancy of Japan has shown itself as little impenetrable to such influence as have the manners and customs of the people. The only difference is that assimilation has of late proceeded with much greater rapidity.

In this language is another guide; for, though the discoverable traces of Chinese influence are comparatively few in the Archaic Dialect, yet they are there. This is a subject which has as yet scarcely been touched. Two Japanese authors of an elder generation, Kahibara and Arawi Hakuseki, did indeed point out the existence of some such traces. But they drew no inference from them, they did not set to work to discover new ones, and their indications, except in one or two obvious cases, have received little attention from later writer's whether native or foreign. But when we compare such words as kane, kume, kuni, saka, tana, uma, and many others with the pronunciation now given, or with that which the phonetic laws of the language in its earlier stage would have caused to be given, to their Chinese equivalents 金, 軍, 郡, 尺, 壇, 馬, etc., the idea forces way that such coincidences of sound and sense cannot all be purely accidental; and when moreover we find that the great majority of the words in question denote things or ideas that were almost certainly imported, we perceive that a more thorough sifting of Archaic Japanese (especially of botanical and zoological names and of the names of implements and manufactures) would probably be the best means of discovering at least the negative features of an antiquity remoter than all written documents, remoter even than the crystallization of the legends which these documents have preserved. In dealing with Korean words found in Archaic Japanese we tread on more delicate ground; for there we have a language which, unlike Chinese, stands to Japanese in the closest family relationship, making it plain that many coincidences of sound and sense should be ascribed to radical affinity rather than to later intercourse. At the same time it appears more probable that, for instance, such seemingly indigenous Japanese terms as Hotoke, "Buddha," and tera, "Buddhist temple," should have been in fact borrowed from the corresponding Korean words Puchhō and chōl than that both nations should have independently chosen homonyms to denote the same foreign ideas. Indeed, it will perhaps not be too bold to assume that in the case of Hotoke, "Buddha," we have before us a word whose journeyings consist of many stages, it having been first brought from India to China, then from China to Korea, and thirdly from Korea to Japan, where finally the ingenuity of philologists has discovered for it a Japanese etymology (hito ke, "human spirit") with which in reality it has nothing whatever to do.

These introductory remarks have already extended to such a length that a reference to the strikingly parallel case of borrowed customs and ideas which is presented by the Ainos in this same archipelago must be left undeveloped. In conclusion, it need only be remarked that a simple translation of one book, such as is here given, does not nearly exhaust the work which might be expended even on the elucidation of that single book, and much less can it fill the gap which still lies between us and a proper knowledge of Japanese antiquity. To do this, the co-operation of the archaeologist must be obtained, while even in the field of the critical investigation of documents there is an immense deal still to be done. Not only must all the available Japanese sources be made to yield up the information which they contain, but the assistance of Chinese and Korean records must be called in. A large quantity of Chinese literature has already been ransacked for a similar purpose by Matsushita Ken-rin, a translation of part of whose very useful compilation entitled "An Exposition of the Foreign Notices of Japan" (異爾日本傳) would be one of the greatest helps towards the desired knowledge. In fact there still remains to be done for Japanese antiquity from our standpoint what Hirata has done for it from the standpoint of a Japanese Shintoist. Except in some of Mr. Satow's papers published in these "Transactions," the subject has scarcely yet been studied in this spirit, and it is possible that the Japanese members of our Society may be somewhat alarmed at the idea of their national history being treated with so little reverence. Perhaps, however, the discovery, of the interest of the field of study thus only waiting to be investigated may reconcile them to the view here propounded. In any case if the early history of Japan is not all true, no amount of make believe can make it so. What we would like to do is to sift the true from the false. As an eminent writer on anthropology ⁸⁰ has recently said, "Historical criticism, that is, judgment, is practised not for the purpose of disbelieving, but of believing. Its object is not to find fault with the author, but to ascertain how much of what he says may be reasonably taken as true." Moreover, even in what is not to be accepted as historic fact there is often much that is valuable from other points of view. If, therefore, we lose a thousand years of so-called Japanese history, it must not be forgotten that Japanese mythology remains as the oldest existing product of the Altaic mind.

The following is a list of all the Japanese works quoted in this Introduction and in the Notes to the Translation. For the sake of convenience to the English reader all the titles have been translated excepting some few which, mostly on account of their embodying recondite allusion, do not admit of translation:—

Catalogue of Family Names, 姓氏錄, by Prince Mata ⁸¹

Chronicles of Japan (generally quoted as the "Chronicles") 日本紀 or 日本書紀 by Prince Toneri and others.

Chronicles of Japan Continued, 續日本紀, by Sugano Ason Mamichi, Fujihara no Ason TSUGUNAHARA and others.

Chronicles of Japan Explained, 釋日本記, by URABE no Yasukata.

Chronicles of the Old Matters of Former Ages, 先代舊事記, authorship uncertain.

Collection of a Myriad Leaves, 萬葉集, by TACHIBANA NO MORAYE (probably).

Collection of Japanese Songs Ancient and Modern, 古今和歌集, by Kino TSURAYUKI and others.

Commentary on the Collection of a Myriad Leaves, 萬葉集, by Kamo no MABUCHI.

Commentary on the Lyric Dramas, 謡曲拾葉集, by Jinkō.

Commentary on the Ritual of the General Purification, 大祓詞後釋, MOTOWORI Norinaga.

Correct Account of the Divine Age, 神代正語, by MOTOWORI Norinaga.

Dictionary of Pillow-Words, 冠辭考, by Kamo no MABUCHI.

⁸⁰ Dr. Tylor in his "Anthropology," Chap. XV.

⁸¹ The names in small capitals are those by which the authors (or compilers) are best known, and are mostly either their surname or personal name. Japanese usage is however very fluctuating, and sanctions moreover the use of a variety of noms de plume. Thus Motowori is not only often mentioned by his personal name Norinaga, but also by the designation of Suzunoya no Ushi, Mabuchi by the designation of Agatawi no Ushi, etc.

Digest of the Imperial Genealogies, 纂輯御系圖, by Yokoyama Yoshiakiyo and Kurokaha Saneyori.

Discussion of the Objections to the Inquiry into the True Chronology, 眞歷不審考, by MOTOWORI Norinaga.

Examination of Difficult Words, 難語考, by Tachibana no MORIBE.

Examination of the Synonyms for Japan, 國號考, by MOTOWORI Norinaga.

Explanation of Japanese Names, 日本譯名, by KAHIBARA Tokushin.

Explanation of the Songs in the Chronicles of Japan, 日本紀歌廻解, by Arikida no HISAOL.

Exposition of the Ancient Histories, 古史傳, by HIRATA Atsutane.

Exposition of the Foreign Notices of Japan, 異稱日本傳, by Matsushita Ken-rin.

Exposition of the Records of Ancient Matters (usually quoted simply as "Motowori's Commentary"), 古事記傳, by MOTOWORI Norinaga.

Exposition of the Record of Ancient Matters Criticized (usually quoted as "Moribe's Critique on Motowori's Commentary,"), 難古事記傳, by Tachibana no MORIBE.

Gleanings from Ancient Story, 古語拾遺, by Imibe no HIRONARI.

Idzu no Chi-Waki, 稜威道別, by Tachibana no MORIBE.

Idzu no Koto-waki, 稜威言別, by (sentence ends)

Inquiry into the Signification of the Names of the Provinces (MS.), 諸國名義考, by Fujihara no Hitomaro.

Inquiry into the True Chronology, 眞歷考, by MOTOWORI Norinaga.

Japanese Words Classified and Explained, 和名類聚鈔, by MINAMO NO SHITAGAFU.

Ko-Chi Tsū, 古史通, by ARAI Kumbi HAKUSEKI.

Ko-Gan Shō, (MS.), 厚顔抄, by KEI-CHIYU. Perpetual Commentary on the Chronicles of Japan (usually quoted as "Tanigaha Shisei's Commentary,"), 日本書記通證, by TANIGAHA SHISEI.

Records of Ancient Matters (often quoted simply as the "Records"), 古事記, by Futo no YASUMARO.

Records of Ancient Matters in the Divine Character, 神字古事記, by Fujihara no Masaoki.

Records of Ancient Matters in the Syllable Character. 假名古事記, by Sakata no Kaneyasu.

Records of Ancient Matters Revised, 校正古事記, Anonymous.

Records of Ancient Matters With Marginal Notes (usually quoted as "the Edition of 1687"), 鼈頭古事記, by Deguchi NOBUYOSHI.

Records of Ancient Matters With the Ancient Reading, 古訓古事記, by Nagase no Masachi (published with Motowori's, sanction)

Records of Ancient Matters with Marginal Readings, 標詞古事記, by Murakami Tadayoshi.

Ritual of the General Purification, 大祓詞, Authorship Uncertain.

Shintō Discussed Afresh, 神道新論, by Takahashi Gorō.

Sources of the Ancient Histories, 古史徴, by HIRATA Atsutane.

Tale of a Bamboo-Cutter, 竹取物語 Authorship Uncertain.

Tama-Katsuma, 玉勝間, by MOTOWORI Norinaga.

Tokihara-Gusa (the full title is Jin-Dai-Sei-Go Tokiha-Gusa), 常盤草, (神代正語常盤草), Hosoda TOMINOBU.

Topography of Yamashiro, 山城風土紀, Authorship Uncertain.

Tō-Ga (MS.), 東雅, by ARAI Kumbi HAKUSEKI.

Wa-Kun Shiwori, 和訓栞, by TANIGAWA SHISEI.

Yamato Tales, 大和物語, Authorship Uncertain.

Besides these two or three standard Chinese works are referred to such as the "Yi Chin" or "Book of Changes" (易經), and the "Shan Hai Ching" or "Mountain and Sea Classic" (山海經); but they are very few, and so easily recognized that it were unnecessary to enumerate them. All Japanese words properly so called are transliterated according to Mr. Satow's "Orthographic System," which, while representing the native spelling, does not in their case differ very greatly from the modern pronunciation. In the case of Sinico-Japanese words, where the divergence between the "Orthographic" spelling and the pronunciation is often considerable, a phonetic spelling has been preferred. With but two or three exceptions, which have been specially noted, Sinico-Japanese words are found only in proper names mentioned in the Preface and in the translator's Introduction, Footnotes, and Sectional Headings. The few Chinese words that occur in the Introduction and Notes are transliterated according to the method introduced by Sir Thomas Wade, and now so widely used by students of Chinese.

VOL. I.⁸²PREFACE.⁸³

I⁸⁴ Yasumaro⁸⁵ say:⁸⁶

Now when chaos had begun to condense, but force and form were not yet manifest, and there was nought named, nought done, who could know its shape? ⁸⁷ Nevertheless Heaven and Earth first parted, and the Three Deities performed the commencement of creation; the Passive and Active Essences then developed, and the Two Spirits became the ancestors of all things. ⁸⁸ Therefore ⁸⁹ did he enter obscurity and emerge into light, and the Sun and Moon were revealed by the washing of his eyes; he floated on and plunged into the sea-water, and Heavenly and Earthly Deities appeared through the ablutions of his person? ⁹⁰ So in the dimness of the great commencement, we, by relying

⁸³ The peculiar nature of this Preface, which is but a tour de force meant to show that, the writer could compose in the Chinese style if he chose to do so, has been already hinted at in the Introduction. It is indeed a laboured little composition, and, but for the facts stated in its latter portion, has no value except perhaps as a specimen of the manner in which the legends of one country may be made to change aspect by being presented through the medium of the philosophical terminology and set phrases of another. It may be divided into five parts. In the first the writer, in a succession of brief allusions antithetically balanced, summarizes the most striking of the legends that are detailed in the pages of his "Records," and in a few words paints the exploits of some of the early emperors. In the second the troubles that ushered in the reign of the Emperor Tem-mu and his triumph over Prince Ohotomo are related at greater length in high-flown allusive phrases borrowed from the Chinese-historians. The third division gives us the Emperor Temmu's decree ordering the compilation of the "Records," and the fourth tells how the execution of that decree was delayed till the reign of the Empress Gemmiyō (A.D. 703-715), on whom likewise a panegyric is pronounced. In the fifth and last the compiler enters into some details concerning the style and method he has adopted.

⁸⁵ This is the compiler's personal name. His full name and titles, as given at the end of this preface, were 正五位上勳五等太朝臣安萬侶 i.e., the Court Noble Futo no Yasumaro, an Officer of the Upper Division of the First Class of the Fifth Rank and of the Fifth Order of Merit. The family of Futo claimed to descend from His Augustness Kamu-yawi-mimi, second son of the Emperor Jim-mu. Yasumaro's death is recorded in the "Chronicles of Japan Continued," under date of 30th August, A.D. 723.

⁸⁶ i.e., I report as follows to Her Majesty the Empress.

⁸⁷ i.e., in the primeval void which preceded all phenomena there was neither form nor movement, and it was therefore unnamed and unknowable.

⁸⁸ This sentence summarizes the first eight Sections of the text of the "Records." The "three Deities" are the Deity Master-of-the August-Centre-of-Heaven, the High-August-Producing-Wondrous-Deity (see Sect. I, Notes 4, 5, and 6.) The two Spirits representing the "Passive and Active Elements" are the creatrix and creator Izanami and Izanagi (the "Female-Who-Invites" and the "Male-Who-Invites,"—see Sect. II, Note 8), the procreation by whom of the islands of the Japanese archipelago and of a large number of gods and goddesses forms the subject of Sections III-VII.

⁸⁹ The word "therefore" is not appropriate in this place, and Motowori accordingly warns the reader to lay no stress upon it.

⁹⁰ This sentence alludes to Izanagi's visit to Hades, and to the purification of his person on his return to the Upper World (see Sects. IX and X). It also refers to the birth of the Sun-Goddess and of the Moon-God from his left and from his right eye respectively, and to that of a large number of lesser gods and goddesses, who were on the original teaching, learn the time of the conception of the earth and of the birth of islands; in the remoteness of the original beginning, we, by trusting the former sages, perceive the era of the genesis of Deities and of the establishment of men. ⁹¹ Truly do we know that a mirror was hung up, that jewels were spat out, and that then an Hundred Kings succeeded each other; that a blade was bitten, and a serpent cut in pieces, so that a Myriad Deities did flourish. ⁹² By deliberations in the Tranquil River the Empire was pacified; by discussions on the Little Shore the land was purified. ⁹³ Wherefore His Augustness Ho-no-ni-ni-gi ⁹⁴ first descended to the Peak of Takachi, ⁹⁵ and the Heavenly Sovereign Kamu-Yamato ⁹⁶ did traverse the Island of the Dragon-Fly. ⁹⁷ A weird bear put forth its claws, and a heavenly sabre was obtained at Takakura. ⁹⁸ They with tails obstructed the path, and a great crow guided him to Yeshinu. ⁹⁹ Dancing in rows they produced from every article of his wearing apparel and from every part of his person on the occasion of his performing those ablutions (see Sect. X.)

⁹⁴ The abbreviated form of the name of the Sun-Goddess's grandson (see Sect. XXXIII, Notes 5 and 10).

⁹⁶ i.e., the first "human Emperor" Jim-mu, whose full native Japanese name is Kamu-Yamato-Ihare-Biko. For the account of his reign see Sects. XLIV-LII.

⁹⁷ i.e., Japan. For the traditional origin of this poetical synonym of Japan see Sect. V. Note 26 and also the legend in Sect. CLVI. The word "traverse" in this sentence alludes to the Emperor Jim-mu's victorious progress from Western Japan to Yamato in the centre of the country, which he is said to have subdued, and where it is related that he established his capital (see Sect. XLIV-L).

⁹⁹ For the Gods with tails who met and conversed with the Emperor Jim-mu in Yamato, see the latter part of Sect. XLVI, a perusal of which will however show that the phrase "obstructed the path," which is here used of them, is not exactly applicable. The miraculous crow which was sent down from Heaven to assist Jim-mu in his conquests, is mentioned at the commencement of the same Section and again at the commencement of Sect. XLVII. For Yeshinu (modern Yoshino) see Sect. XLVI, Note 3.

destroyed the brigands, and listening to a song they vanquished the foemen. ¹⁰⁰ Being instructed in a dream, he was reverent to the Heavenly and Earthly Deities, and was therefore styled the Wise Monarch, ¹⁰¹ having gazed on the smoke, he was benevolent to the black-haired people, and is therefore remembered as the Emperor-Sage. ¹⁰² Determining the frontiers and civilising the country, he issued laws from the Nearer Afumi; ¹⁰³ reforming the surnames and selecting the gentile names, he held sway at the Further Asuka. ¹⁰⁴ Though each differed in caution and in ardour, though all were unlike in accomplishments and in intrinsic worth, yet was there none who did not by contemplating antiquity correct manners that had fallen to ruin, and by illumining modern times repair laws that were approaching dissolution. ¹⁰⁵

In the august reign of the Heavenly Sovereign who governed the Eight Great Islands from the Great Palace of Kiyomihara at Asuka, ¹⁰⁶ the Hidden Dragon put on perfection, ¹⁰⁰ The word "dancing" in this sentence must not be too closely pressed, as it is used simply to balance the word "song in the parallel clause,—which clause itself does but echo the sense of that which precedes it. The reference is to the song which Jim-mu sang as a signal to his followers to destroy the "earth-spiders" (see Sect. XLVIII), and perhaps also to the songs in Sect. XLIX.

¹⁰² "The Emperor Nin-toku" must be supplied as the logical subject of this clause. The allusion to the smoke and the laudatory designation here mentioned will be understood by reference to Sect. CXXI. The "black-haired people" is a common Chinese phrase for the peasantry or the people in general.

¹⁰³ "The Emperor Sei-mu" must be supplied as the logical subject of this clause. His labours are briefly recapitulated in Sect. XCIV. For the province called Nearer Afumi (Chika-tsu-Afumi), see Sect. XXIX, Note 20. Its name is here rhythmically balanced against "Further Asuka" in the following clause.

¹⁰⁴ "The Emperor In-giyō" must be supplied as the logical subject of this sentence. This Sovereign's rectification of the names forms the subject of Sect. CXXXIX For Further Asuka (Toho-tsu-Asuka) see Sect. CXXXIII, Notes 13 and 11.

the Reiterated Thunder came at the appointed moment. Having heard a song in a dream, he felt that he should continue the succession; having reached the water at night, he knew that he should receive the inheritance. Nevertheless Heaven's time was not yet, and he escaped like the cicada to the Southern Mountains; both men and matters were favourable, and he marched like the tiger to the Eastern Land. Suddenly riding in the Imperial Palanquin, he forced his way across mountains and rivers: the Six Divisions rolled like thunder, the Three Hosts sped like lightning. The erect spears lifted up their might, and the bold warriors arose like smoke: the crimson flags glistened among the weapons, and the ill-omened crew were shattered like tiles. Or ere a day had elapsed, the evil influences were purified: forthwith were the cattle let loose and the horses given repose, as with shouts of victory they returned to the Flowery Summer; the flags were rolled up and the javelins put away, as with dances and chants they came to rest in the capital city. The year was that of the Cock, and it was in the Second Moon ¹⁰⁷ At the Great Palace of Kiyomihara did he ascend to the Heavenly seat: in morality he outstripped Ken-Kō, in virtue he surpassed Shiū-Ō. Having grasped the celestial seals, he was paramount over the Six Cardinal Points; having obtained the heavenly supremacy, he annexed the Eight Wildernesses. He held the mean between the Two Essences, ¹⁰⁸ and regulated the order of the Five Elements. He established divine reason herewith to advance good customs; he disseminated brilliant usages wherewith to make the land great. Moreover the ocean of his wisdom, in its vastness, profoundly investigated the highest antiquity; the mirror of his heart, in its fervour, clearly observed former ages.

Hereupon the Heavenly Sovereign commanded, saying: "I hear that the chronicles of the emperors and likewise the original words in the possession of the various families deviate from exact truth, and are mostly amplified by empty falsehoods. If at the present time these imperfections be not amended, ere many years shall have elapsed, the purport of this, the great basis ¹⁰⁹ of the country, the grand foundation of the monarchy, will be destroyed. So now I desire to have the chronicles of the emperors selected and recorded, and the old words examined and ascertained, falsehoods being erased and the Divisions" and the "Three Hosts" are Chinese designations of the Imperial troops, while the "ill-omened crew" of course refers to Tem-mu's enemies.—Prince Ohotomo, and his followers. In the ensuing sentence we see peace restored: Tem-mu has returned to the capital (for which the words "Flowery Summer" are a Chinese periphrasis), he has taken in his hands the insignia of office, and reigns p. 11 supreme over the Six Cardinal Points (North, South, East, West, Above, and Below) and over the "Eight Wildernesses" (i.e., the barbarous regions on all sides). The writer concludes this division of his Preface by a glowing panegyric of the Monarch, who was, he says, superior to Hsüan Hou (軒后 Jap. Ken-Kō), and Chou Wang (周王 Jap. Shiū-O), famous Chinese sovereigns of the legendary period. So intelligent were his efforts, so perfect was his conformity with the ways of Heaven as displayed in the workings of the Active and Passive Essences, that the Five Elements (Water Fire, Wood, Metal and Earth) all interacted with due regularity, and laudable usages alone prevailed throughout the land. Up to this point the preface may be said to be purely ornamental.

¹⁰⁷ i.e., March (20th as the "Chronicles" tell us), A. D. 673. The original, to denote the year and the month mentioned, uses the periphrases 歲次大梁 and 月踵夾鍾 but doubtless without any reference to the original proper meaning of those terms.

¹⁰⁸ The text literally reads thus: "He rode in the exactness of the Two Essences." But the author's intention is to tell us that Tem-mu acted according to the golden mean, keeping the balance even, and not inclining unduly either to the Active or the Passive side.

¹⁰⁹ Literally "warp and woof," i.e., cannon, standard, mainspring, first necessity.

truth deter. mined, in order to transmit [the latter] to after ages." ¹¹⁰ At that time there was a retainer whose surname was Hiyeda and his personal name Are. He was twenty-eight years old, and of so intelligent a disposition that he could repeat with his mouth whatever met his eyes, and record in his heart whatever struck his ears. ¹¹¹ Forthwith Are was commanded to learn by heart the genealogies of the emperors, and likewise the words of former ages. Nevertheless time elapsed and the age changed, and the thing was not yet carried out. ¹¹²

Prostrate I consider how Her Majesty the Empress, having obtained Unity, illumines the empire,—being versed in the Triad, nourishes the people. ¹¹³ Ruling from the Purple Palace, Her virtue reaches to the utmost limits of the horse's hoof-marks: dwelling amid the Sombre Retinue, Her influence illumines the furthest distance attained to by vessels' prows. The sun rises, and the brightness is increased; the clouds disperse, neither is there smoke. Never cease the historiographers from recording the good omens of connected stalks and double rice-ears; never for a single moon is the treasury without the tribute of continuous beacon-fires and repeated interpretations. In fame She must be pronounced superior to Bum-Mei, in virtue more eminent than Ten-Itsū. ¹¹⁴

¹¹² i.e., the Emperor Tem-mu died before the plan of the compilation of these "Records" had been carried into execution. Viz. it may be presumed, before a selection from the various original documents committed to memory by Are had been reduced to writing.

expression 支扈) is a phrase on which no authority consulted by the translator throws any light. The "utmost limits of the horses' hoof-marks" and the "furthest distance attained to by vessels' prows" are favourite phrases in the old literature of Japan to express extreme distance (see, for instance, Mr. Satow's translations of the "Ritual of the Praying for Harvest," Vol. VII, Pt. II, p. 111 of these "Transactions" and the present writer's "Classical Poetry of the Japanese," p. 111. Such unusual phenomena as connected stalks, i.e., trunks springing from the same root and uniting again higher up and "joint rice-ears," i.e., two rice-ears growing on a single stem, are considered lucky omens by the Chinese, and their appearance is duly chronicled in those Japanese histories that are composed after the Chinese model. The "continuous beacon-fires" and the "repeated interpretations" are phrases alluding to the foreign lands (i.e., the various small Korean states) speaking strange languages, whence tribute was sent to Japan. The text, as it stands, gives the impression that the arrival of the tribute-ships was announced by beacon-fires being lighted. Motowori however wishes us to understand the author's meaning to be that foreign states which, in the natural course of events, would be inimical, and the approach of whose ships would be signaled by the lighting of beacon-fires, now peacefully sent gifts to the Japanese monarch. It may be added that the whole sentence is borrowed scarcely without alteration from the "Wên Hsüan" (文選). Bum-mei is the Japanese pronunciation of the characters 文命,

Hereupon, ¹¹⁵ regretting the errors in the old words, and wishing to correct the misstatements in; the former chronicles, She, on the eighteenth day of the ninth month of the fourth year of Wa-do ¹¹⁶ commanded me Yasumaro to select and record the old words learnt by heart by Hiyeda no Are according to the Imperial Decree, and dutifully to lift them up to Her. ¹¹⁷

In reverent obedience to the contents of the Decree, I have made a careful choice. But in high antiquity both speech and thought were so simple, that it would be difficult to arrange phrases and compose periods in the characters. ¹¹⁸ To relate everything in an ideographic transcription would entail an inadequate expression of the meaning; to write altogether according to the phonetic method would make the story of events unduly lengthy. ¹¹⁹ For this reason have I sometimes in the same sentence used the phonetic and ideographic systems conjointly, and have sometimes in one matter used the ideographic record exclusively. Moreover where the drift of the words was obscure, I have by comments elucidated their signification; but need it be said that I have nowhere commented on what was easy? ¹²⁰ Again, in such cases as calling the surname 日下 Kusaka, and the personal name written with the character 帶 Tarashi, I have followed usage without alteration. ¹²¹ Altogether the things recorded commence the original name of Yü (禹) a celebrated legendary emperor of China. Ten-Itsu is the Japanese pronunciation of the characters 天乙, the original name of the ancient emperor T'ang (湯), who is said to have founded the Shang dynasty in the eighteenth century B.C.

¹¹⁵ This word is here used as an initial particle without special significance.

¹¹⁶ i.e., 3rd November A. D. 711. Wa-dō (和銅) is the name of a Japanese "year-period" which lasted from A.D. 708 to 714.

¹¹⁷ i.e., present them to her. With this sentence ends the fourth division of the preface.

¹¹⁹ i.e., if I adopted in its entirety the Chinese ideographic method of writing, I should often fail of giving a true impression of the nature of the original documents (conf. the preceding Note). If, on the other hand, I consistently used the Chinese characters, syllable by syllable, as phonetic symbols for Japanese sounds, this work would attain to inordinate proportions, on account of the great length of the polysyllabic Japanese as compared with the monosyllabic Chinese. The author's meaning may be illustrated by referring to the first clause of the "Records," 天地初發之時 ("when Heaven and Earth began"), which is thus written ideographically with six Chinese characters, whereas it would require no less than eleven to write it phonetically so as to represent the sound of the Japanese words ame tsuchi no hazhime no toki, viz., 阿米都知能波士賣能登伎. It should be noticed that in this passage the author employs the technical expressions on and kun (音 and 訓) in a manner which is the precise reverse of that sanctioned by modern usage, on being with him the phonetic, and kun the ideographic, acceptance of the Chinese characters.

¹²⁰ It will be seen by perusing the following translation that the author can scarcely be said to have vouchsafed as much exegetical matter as this statement would lead us to expect. Indeed his "comments" are mostly confined to information concerning the pronunciation of certain characters. See however Motowori's remarks on this sentence in Vol. II. pp. 19-20 of this Commentary.

¹²¹ The author here refers to a certain class of Japanese words which offer peculiar difficulties because written neither ideographically nor phonetically. but in a completely arbitrary manner, the result of a freak of usage. His manner of expressing himself is, however, ambiguous. What he meant to say is, as Motowori points out:

"Again in such cases as writing the surname Kusaka, with the characters 日下, and the personal name Tarashi with the character 帶, I have followed usage without alteration." It is his imperfect mastery with the separation of Heaven and Earth, and conclude with the august reign at Woharida.¹²² So from the Deity Master-of-the-August-Centre-of-Heaven down to His Augustness Prince-Wave-Limit-Brave-Cormorant-Thatch-Meeting-Incompletely makes the First Volume; from the Heavenly Sovereign Kamu-Yamato-Ihare-Biko down to the august reign of Homuda makes the Second Volume; from the Emperor Oho-Sazaki down to the great palace of Woharida makes the Third Volume.¹²³ Altogether I have written Three Volumes, which I reverently and respectfully present.¹²⁴ I Yasumaro, with true trembling and true fear, bow my head, bow my head.

Reverently presented by the Court Noble Futo no Yasumaro, an Officer of the Upper Division of the Fifth Rank and of the Fifth Order of Merit, on the 28th day of the first moon of the fifth year of Wa-dō.¹²⁵ over the Chinese construction that makes him fall into such errors,—errors easily rectifiable, however, by the more widely read modern Japanese literati.

¹²² I.e., commence with the creation, and end with the death of the Empress Sui-ko (A. D. 628), who resided at Woharida.

¹²³ For the Deity Master-of-the-August-Centre-of-Heaven see Sect. I, Note 4, and for Prince-Wave-Limit, etc., see Sect. XLII, Note 15. Kamu-Yamato-Ihare-Biko is the proper native Japanese name of the emperor commonly known by the Chinese "canonical name" of Jim-mu. Homuda is part of the native Japanese name of the Emperor Ojin (see Sects. XCIV to CXVIII). Oho-Sazaki is the native Japanese name of the Emperor Nin-toku (see Sects. CXIX to CXXX.)

¹²⁴ Q.d., to the Empress.

¹²⁵ I.e., 10th March, A. D. 712.

SECTION I.—THE BEGINNING OF HEAVEN AND EARTH

The names of the Deities ¹²⁶ that were born ¹²⁷ in the Plain of High Heaven ¹²⁸ when the Heaven and Earth began were the Deity Master-of-the-August-Centre-of-Heaven, ¹²⁹ next the High-August-Producing-Wondrous Deity, ¹³⁰ next the Divine-Producing-Wondrous-Deity. ¹³¹ These three Deities were all Deities born alone, and hid their persons. ¹³² The names of the Deities that were born next from a thing that sprouted up like unto a reed-shoot when the earth, ¹³³ young and like unto floating oil, drifted about medusa-like, were the Pleasant-Reed-Shoot-Prince-Elder Deity, ¹³⁴ next the Heavenly-Eternally-Standing-Deity. ¹³⁵ These two Deities were likewise born alone, and hid their persons. The five Deities in the above list are separate Heavenly Deities. ¹³⁶

¹²⁶ For this rendering of the Japanese word kami see Introduction, pp. xvii-xviii.

¹²⁷ Literally, "that became" (成). Such "becoming" is concisely defined by Motowori as "the birth of that which did not exist before."

¹²⁸ In Japanese Takama-no-hara.

¹²⁹ Ame-no-mi-naka-nushi-no-kami.

¹³⁰ Taka-mi-musu-bi-no-kami. It is open to doubt whether the syllable bi, instead of signifying "wondrous," may not simply be a verbal termination, in which case the three syllables musubi would mean, not "wondrous producing," but simple "producing," i.e., if we adopt the interpretation of the Verb musubuas "to produce" in the Active sense of the word, an interpretation as to whose propriety there is some room for doubt. In the absence of certainty the translator has followed the view expressed by Motowori and adopted by Hirata. The same remark applies to the following and other similar names.

¹³¹ Kami-musu-bi-no-kami. This name reappears in later Sections under the lengthened form of ami-musu-bi-mi-oya-no-mikoto, i.e., His Augustness the Deity-Producing-Wondrous-August-Ancestor, and also in abbreviated forms.

¹³³ Here and elsewhere the character 國, properly "country" (regio), is used where "earth" (tellus) better suits the sense. Apparently in the old language the word kuni (written 國), which is now restricted to the former meaning, was used ambiguously somewhat like our word "land."

¹³⁴ Umashi-ashi-kabi-hiko-ji-no-kami. For hiko here and elsewhere rendered "prince" see Introduction p. xvi; ji is rendered "elder" in accordance with the opinion expressed by Motowori and Hirata, who say that it is "an Honorific designation of males identical with the ji meaning old man."

¹³⁵ Or, the Deity-Standing-Eternally-in-Heaven, Ame-no-toko-tachi-no-kami. The translation of the name here given follows the natural meaning of the characters composing it, and has the sanction of Tanigaha Shisai. Motowori and Hirata take toko to stand for soko, "bottom," and interpret accordingly; but this is probably but one of the many instances in which the Japanese philologists allow themselves to be led by the boldness of their etymological speculations into identifying words radically distinct.

¹³⁶ This is a note in the original, where such notes are indented, as has also been done in the translation. The author's obscure phrase is explained by Motowori to mean that these Heavenly Deities were separate from those who came into existence afterwards, and especially from the Earthly-Eternally-Standing-Deity (Kuni-no-toko-tachi-no-kami) who in the "Chronicles" is the first divine being of whom mention is made. These five were, he says, "separate" and had nothing to do with the creation of the world. It should be stated that the sentence will also bear the interpretation "The five Deities in the above list are Deities who divided Heaven" (presumably from Earth;) but this rendering has against it the authority of all the native editors. As the expressions "Heavenly Deity" and "Earthly Deity" (lit., "Country Deity" are of frequent occurrence in these "Records," it may be as well to state that, according to Motowori, the "Heavenly Deities" were such as either dwelt in Heaven or had originally descended to Earth from Heaven, whereas the Earthly Deities were those born and dwelling in Japan.

SECTION II.—THE SEVEN DIVINE GENERATIONS

The names of the Deities that were born next were the Earthly-Eternally-Standing-Deity, ¹³⁷ next the Luxuriant-Integrating-Master-Deity. ¹³⁸ These two Deities were likewise [17] Deities born alone, and hid their persons. The names of the Deities that were born next were the Deity Mud-Earth-Lord next his younger sister the Deity Mud-Earth-Lady; ¹³⁹ next the Germ-Integrating-Deity, next his younger sister the Life-Integrating-Deity; ¹⁴⁰ next the Deity Elder-of-the-Great-Place, next his younger sister the Deity Elder-Lady-of-the-Great-Place; ¹⁴¹ next the Deity Perfect-Exterior, ¹⁴² next his younger sister the Deity Oh-Awful-Lady; ¹⁴³ next the Deity the Male-Who-Invites, next his younger sister the Deity the Female-Who-Invites. ¹⁴⁴

From the Earthly-Eternally-Standing Deity down to the Deity the Female-Who-Invites in the previous list are what are termed the Seven Divine Generations.

¹³⁷ Or, the Deity-Standing-Eternally-on-Earth, Kuni-no-toko-tachi-no-kami, Conf. Note 10 to Sect. I.

¹³⁸ Toyo-kumo-nu-no-kami. There is much doubt as to the proper interpretation of this name. The characters 雲野 ("cloud-moor"), with which the syllables read kumo-nu are written, are almost certainly phonetic, and the translator has followed Motowori's view as corrected by Hirata, according to which kumo is taken to stand for kumu, "integrating," and nu is considered to be an apocopated form of nushi, "master" (or more vaguely "the person who presides at or does a thing"). Mabuchi in his "Dictionary of Pillow-words," Article Sasutake, argues that the syllables in question should be interpreted in the sense of "coagulated mud"; out this is less satisfactory.

¹³⁹ U-hiji-no-kami and Su-hiji-ni-no-kami. The names of this pair tend themselves to a variety of interpretations. Motowori's view of the meaning of the first three syllables in each seems best, if it is founded on the Chinese characters with which they are written in the parallel passage of the "Chronicles," and it has therefore been adopted here. Hirata interprets the names thus: First-Mud-Lord and First-Sand-Lady, and takes ni to be an alternative form of the Honorific ne found in so many proper names. This view of the meaning of ni has been followed by the translator. On the other hand Mabuchi explains the names to mean respectively Floating-Mud-Earth and Sinking-Mud-Earth. The only thing therefore that is granted by all is that the names in question refer to the mud or slime out of which the world was afterwards made. The reader will bear in mind that "younger-sister" and "wife" are convertible names in Archaic Japanese. (See Introduction p. XXXVIII.)

¹⁴⁰ Tsunu-guhi-no-kami and Iku-guhi-no-kami. The interpretation given is one in which the commentators agree, and which has some probability in its favour. It must however only be accepted with reservation.

¹⁴¹ Oho-to-no-ji-no-kami and Oho-to-no-be-no-kami.

¹⁴² Omo-daru-no-kami. We might also render omo-daru by "perfect-face," i.e., perfectly beautiful."

¹⁴³ Aya-kashiko-ne-no-kami. For "awful" we might substitute "venerable." Hirata, commenting on this name and the seven which precede it, says: U-hiji-ui and Su-hiji-ni are so named from their having contained the germs of what was to become the earth. Oho-to-no-ji and Oho-to-no-be are so called from the appearance of the incipient earth. Tsunu-guhi and Iku-guhi are so called from the united appearance of the earth and the Deities as they came into existence. Omo-daru and Kashiko-ne are so called from the completion of the august persons of the Deities. Thus their names were given to them from the gradual progress [of creation]."

¹⁴⁴ Izana-gi-no-kami and Izana-mi-no-kami. There is some slight diversity of opinion as to the literal signification of the component parts of the names of these the best-known of the Deities hitherto mentioned, though the gist of the meaning remains unchanged. Motowori would prefer to read Iza-na-gi and Iza-a-mi, taking the syllable na as the Second Personal Pronoun "thou," and understanding the names thus: "the Prince-Who-Invites-Thee" and the "Princess-Who-Invites-Thee." It seems however more natural to look on izana as forming but one word, viz., the Root of the Verb Izanafu, "to invite." The older native commentators mean the same thing when they tell us that na is an Expletive. The syllables gi and mi are of uncertain etymology, but occur in other Archaic words to denote the female and male of a pair. The appropriateness of the names of these deities will be seen by referring to Sect. IV.

(The two solitary Deities above [-mentioned] are each called one generation. Of the succeeding ten Deities each pair of deities is called a generation.) ¹⁴⁵

¹⁴⁵ For explanatory notes which are printed in small type in the original, small type is likewise used in this translation.

SECTION III.—THE ISLAND OF ONOGORO

Hereupon all the Heavenly Deities commanded the two Deities His Augustness the Male-Who-Invites and Her Augustness ¹⁴⁶ the Female-Who-Invites, ordering them to "make, consolidate, and give birth to this drifting land." Granting to them an heavenly jewelled spear, ¹⁴⁷ they [thus] deigned to charge them. So the two Deities, standing upon the Floating Bridge of Heaven, ¹⁴⁸ pushed down the jewelled spear and stirred with it, whereupon, when they had stiffed the brine till it went curdle-curdle, ¹⁴⁹ and drew [the spear] up, the brine that dripped down from the end of the spear was piled up and became an island. This is the Island of Onogoro. ¹⁵⁰ ¹⁴⁶ For this rendering of the Japanese title Mikoto see Introduction, p. xvi, last paragraph.

¹⁴⁷ The characters translated "jewelled spear" are 沼矛, whose proper Chinese signification would be quite different. But the first of the two almost certainly stands phonetically for 瓊 or 玉,—the syllable nu, which is its sound, having apparently been an ancient word for "jewel" or "head," the better-known Japanese term being tama. In many places the word "jewel" (or "jewelled") seems to be used simply as an adjective expressive of beauty. But Motowori and Hirata credit it in this instance with its proper signification, and the translator always renders it literally, leaving the reader to consider it to be used metaphorically if and where he pleases.

¹⁴⁹ I.e., "till it became thick and glutinous." It is not easy to find in English a word which will aptly render the original Japanese onomatopoeia korokoworo. The meaning may also be "till it made a curdling sound." But though the character 鳴, "to make a noise," sanctions this view, it is not the view approved by the commentators, and 鳴 is probably only written phonetically for a homonymous word signifying "to become," which we find in the parallel passage of the "Chronicles."

¹⁵⁰ I.e., "Self-Curdling," "Self-Condensed." It is supposed to have been one of the islets off the coast of the larger island of Ahaji.

SECTION IV.—COURTSHIP OF THE DEITIES THE MALE- WHO-INVITES AND THE FEMALE WHO-INVITES

Having descended from Heaven onto this island, they saw to the erection ¹⁵¹ of an heavenly august pillar, they saw to the erection of an hall of eight fathoms.¹⁵² Tunc quæsiuit [Augustus Mas-Qui-Invitat] a minore sorore Augustâ Feminâ-Qui-Invitat: "Tuum corpus quo in modo factum est?" Respondit dicens: "Meum corpus crescens crevit, sed est una pars quæ non crevit continua." Tunc dixit Augustus Mas-Qui-Invitat: "Meum corpus crescens crevit, sed est una pars quæ crevit superflua. Ergo an bonum erit ut hanc corporis mei partem quæ crevit, superflua in tui corporis partem quæ non crevit continua inseram, et regiones procreem?" Augusta Femina-Quæ-Invitat respondit dicens: "Bonum erit." Tunc dixit Augustus Mas-Qui-Invitat: "Quod quum ita sit, ego et tu hanc cœlestem augustam, columnam circumeuntes mutuoque occurrentes, augustarum [i.e. privatarum] partium augustam coitionem faciemus." ¹⁵³ Hâc pactione factâ, dixit [Augustus Mas-Qui-Invitat]: "Tu a dexterâ circumeuns occurre; ego a sinistrâ occurram." Absolutâ pactione ubi circumierunt, Augusta Femina-Qui-Invitat primum inquit: "O venuste et amabilis adolescens!" Deinde Augustus Mas-Qui-Invitat inquit: "O venusta et amabilis virgo!" Postquam singuli orationi finem fecerunt, [Augustus Mas-Qui-Invitat] locutus est sorori, dicens: "Non decet feminam primum verba facere." Nihilominus in thalamo [opus procreationis] inceperunt, et filium [nomine] Hirudinem¹⁵⁴ [vel Hirudini similem] pepererunt. This child they placed in a boat of reeds, and let it float away. Next they gave birth to the Island of Aha. ¹⁵⁵ This likewise is not reckoned among their children. ¹⁵⁶

¹⁵⁴ The name in the original is Hiru-go, an instance of the fortuitous verbal resemblances occasionally found between unrelated languages.

¹⁵⁵ Literary "foam." It is supposed to have been an islet near the island of Ahaji in the province of Sanuki.

¹⁵⁶ Hiru-go was not so reckoned, because he was a failure.

SECTION V.—BIRTH OF THE EIGHT ISLANDS

Hereupon the two Deities took counsel, saying: "The children to whom we have now given birth are not good. It will be best to announce this in the august place ¹⁵⁷ of the Heavenly Deities." They ascended forthwith to Heaven and enquired of Their Augustnesses the Heavenly Deities. Then the Heavenly Deities commanded and found out by grand divination, ¹⁵⁸ and ordered them, saying: "They were not good because the woman spoke first. Descend back again and amend your words." So thereupon descending back, they again went round the heavenly august pillar as before. Thereupon his Augustness the Male-Who-Invites spoke first: "Ah! what a fair and lovely maiden! Afterwards his younger sister Her Augustness the Female-Who-Invites spoke: "Ah! what a fair and lovely youth!" Tali modo quoniam orationi finem fecerant, auguste coierunt et pepererunt a child the Island of Ahaji, Ho-no-sa-wake. ¹⁵⁹ Next they gave birth to the Island of Futa-no in Iyo. ¹⁶⁰ This island has one body and four faces, and each face has a name. So the Land of Iyo is called Lovely-Princess; ¹⁶¹ the Land of Sanuki ¹⁶² is called Prince-Good-Boiled-Rice; ¹⁶³ the Land of Aha is called the Princess-of-Great-Food; ¹⁶⁴ the Land of Tosa ¹⁶⁵ is called Brave-Good-Youth. ¹⁶⁶ Next they gave ¹⁵⁷ The characters 御所 here translated "august place" (the proper Chinese signification is "imperial place") are those still in common use to denote the Mikado's palace.

¹⁵⁸ For an elaborate account of the various methods of divination practised by the Ancient Japanese see Note 5 to Mr. Satow's translation of the "Service of the Gods of Wind at Tatsuta" in the "Transactions of the Asiatic Society of Japan," Vol. VII, Pt. IV, p. 425 et seq. "The most important mode of divination practised by the primitive Japanese was that of scorching the shoulder-blade of a deer over a clear fire, and finding, omens in the cracks produced by the heat."

¹⁵⁹ Aha-ji signifies "foam-way," i.e., "the way to Foam (Aha)-Island," on account, it is said, of its intermediate position between the mainland and the province of Aha in what is in modern parlance the Island of Shikoku. The author of the "Chronicles of Old Affairs" fancifully derives the name from a hoji "my shame." The etymology of Ho-no-sa-wake is disputed; but Hirata, who in the body of Vol. III of his "Exposition of the Ancient Histories" had already expended much ingenuity in discussing it, gives the most satisfactory interpretation that has yet been proposed in a postscript to that volume, where he explains it to signify "Rice-ear-True-Youth." Wake (sometimes wake or waku) is a word of frequent occurrence in the names of gods and heroes. Whether it really signifies "youth," as Hirata believes and as it is most natural to suppose, or whether Motowori's guess that it is an Honorific title corrupted from waga kimi ye (lit. "my prince elder brother," more freely "lord") remains undecided. When it is used as a "gentile name," the translator renders it by "lord," as that in such cases is its import apart from the question of derivation. Sa, rendered "true," may almost be considered to have dwindled down to a simple Honorific.—It is this little island which is said by the author of the "Chronicles" to have been the caul with which the great island of Yamato was born. Ahaji and Ho-no-sa-wake must be understood to be alternative names, the latter being what in other cases is prefaced by the phrase "another name for whom."

¹⁶¹ Ye-hime. For the rendering of hiko and hime as "prince" and "princess" see introduction, p. xvi.

¹⁶² Probably derived, as Hirata shows, from saho-ki, "pole-trees," a p. 25 tribute of poles having anciently been paid by that province. Motowori adopts the unusual reading of the name given in the "Japanese Words Classified and Explained," viz. Sanugi, with the last syllable nigori'ed.

¹⁶³ Ihi-yori-hiko. The translator, though with some hesitation, follows Motowori in looking on yori as a contraction of yorishi, "good." The character used for it in the original is 依.

¹⁶⁴ Oho-ge-tsu-hime. Remember that aha signifies not only "foam" but "millet" so that we need not be astonished to find that the alternative designation of the island so designated is that of a food-goddess.

birth to the Islands of Mitsu-go ¹⁶⁷ near Oki, ¹⁶⁸ another name for which [islands] is Heavenly-Great-Heart-Youth. ¹⁶⁹ ¹⁷⁰ This island likewise has one body and four faces ¹⁷¹ and each face has a name. So the land of Tsukushi is called White-Sun-Youth; ¹⁷² the Land of Toyo ¹⁷³ is called Luxuriant-Sun-Youth; ¹⁷⁴ the Land of Hi is called Brave Sun-Confronting-Luxuriant-Wondrous-Lord-Youth; ¹⁷⁵ the Land of Kumaso is called Brave-Sun-Youth. ¹⁷⁶ Next they gave birth to the Island of Iki, ¹⁷⁷ another name for which is Heaven's One-Pillar. ¹⁷⁸ Next they gave birth to the Island of Tsu, ¹⁷⁹ another name for which is Heavenly-Hand-net-Good-Princess. ¹⁸⁰ Next they gave birth to the Island of Sado. ¹⁸¹ Next they gave birth to Great-Yamato-the-Luxuriant-Island-of-the-Dragon-Fly, ¹⁸² another name for which is Heavenly-August-Sky-Luxuriant-Dragon-fly-Lord-Youth. The name of "Land-of -the- Eight-Great-Islands" ¹⁸³ therefore originated ¹⁶⁵ Etymology uncertain, only fanciful derivations being proposed by the native philologists.

¹⁶⁶ Take-yori-wake.

¹⁶⁷ Mitsu-go signifies "triplets," lit., "three children." The three islets intended are Ama-ma-shima, Mukafu-no-shima and Chiburi-no-shima.

¹⁶⁸ Oki probably here signifies "offing," which is its usual acceptation.

¹⁶⁹ Ame-no-oshi-koro-wake. The syllables oshi, which recur in the names of many gods and heroes, are rendered "great" in accordance with Motowori's plausible conjecture that they are an abbreviation of ohoshi ("great," not "many" as in the later language). The translation of koro by "heart" follows a conjecture of Hirata's (Motowori acknowledged that he could make nothing of the word), according to which it is taken to be an abbreviated form of kokoro, "heart."

¹⁷⁰ None but fanciful derivations of this word are suggested by the native philologists.

¹⁷¹ Etymology uncertain, only fanciful derivations being proposed by the native philologists.

¹⁷² A note to the edition of 1687 says: "Should the word 'four' be changed to 'five?'" For most texts enumerate five countries in this passage with slight variations in the names, Himuka, (Hiuga), which it certainly seems strange to omit, being the fourth on the list with the alternative name of Toyokuzhi-hine-wake, while the alternative name of Hi is Haya-hi-wake, Motowori argues that an enumeration of four agrees better with the context, while Moribe in his Critique on Motowori's Commentary decides in favour of the five. There are thus texts and authorities in favour of both views.

¹⁷³ Shira-bi-wake.

¹⁷⁴ Toyo means "luxuriant" or "fertile." Hi appears to signify "fire" or "sun." Kumaso is properly a compound, Kuma-so, as the district is often mentioned by the simple name of So. Kuma signifies "bear," and Motowori suggests that the use of the name of this the fiercest of p. 26 beasts as a prefix may be traced to the evil reputation of that part of the country for robbers and outlaws. He quotes similar compounds with kuma in support of this view.

¹⁷⁵ Toyo-bi-wake.

¹⁷⁶ Take-hi-mukahi-toyo-kuzhi-hine-wake. The interpretation of this name follows Motowori.

¹⁷⁷ Take-bi-wake.

¹⁷⁸ Etymology uncertain, but there seems reason to suppose that the name was originally pronounced Yiki or Yuki.

¹⁷⁹ Ame-hito-tsu-bashira.

¹⁸⁰ Tsu (Tsu-shima) means "port," "anchorage," a name probably given to this island on account of its being the midway halting-place for junks plying between Japan and Korea.

¹⁸¹ Ame-no-sade-yori-hime. The interpretation of sade (rendered "hand-net") is uncertain. The translator has followed that sanctioned by an ode in Vol. I of the "Collection of a Myriad Leaves" and by a passage in the "Japanese Words Classified and Explained." Hirata takes sa to be an Honorific and te to be the usual word for "hand," while Motowori gives up the name in despair.

¹⁸² Etymology uncertain.

¹⁸³ Oho-yamato-toyo-aki-dzu-shima (the original of the alternative personal name is Ame-no-mi-sora-toyo-aki-dzu-ne-wake). The etymology of Yamato is much disputed. Mabuchi, in his "Addenda to the Commentary on the Collection of a Myriad Leaves," derives the name from yama-to, "mountain-gate." Motowori, in a learned discussion to be found in his "Examination of the Synonyms of Japan," pp. 24-27, proposes three other possible derivations, viz. yama-to, "mountain-place," yama-to (supposed to stand for yama-tsubo and to mean "mountain-secluded"), and yama-utsu (utsu being a supposititious Archaic form of uchi), "within the in these eight islands having been born first. After that, when they had returned, ¹⁸⁴ they gave birth to the Island of Ko[-shima] ¹⁸⁵ in Kibi, ¹⁸⁶ another name for which [island] is Brave-Sun Direction-Youth. Next they gave birth to the Island of Adzuki, ¹⁸⁷ another name for which is Oho-Nu-De-Hime. Next they gave birth to the Island of Oho [-shima], ¹⁸⁸ another name for which is Oho-Tamaru-Wake. Next they gave birth to the Island of Hime, ¹⁸⁹ another name for which is Heaven's-One-Root. Next they gave birth to the Island of Chika, ¹⁹⁰ another name for which is Heavenly-Great-Male. Next they gave birth to the Island[s] of Futa-go, ¹⁹¹ another name for which is Heaven's-Two-Houses, (Six islands in all from the Island of Ko, in Kibi to the Island of Heaven's-Two-Houses).

mountains." Other derivations are yama-to (山外), "without the mountains," yama-ato, "mountain-traces" and yama-todomi, "mountains stopping," i.e. (as Moribe, who proposes it, explains), "far as the mountains can be seen." Another disputed point is whether the name of Yamato which here designates the Main Island of the Archipelago, but which in the common parlance of both ancient and modern times is the denomination on the one hand of the single province of Yamato and on the other of the whole Empire of Japan, originally had the wider application or the more restricted one. Motowori and the author of the "Exposition of the Foreign Notices of Japan" seem to the present writer to make p. 27 out the case in favour of the latter view. Motowori supposes the name to have denoted first a village and then a district, before being applied to a large province and finally to the entire country. The "Island of the Dragon-fly" is a favourite name for Japan in the language of the Japanese poets. It is traced to a remark of the Emperor Jim-mu, who is said to have compared the shape of the country round Mountain Hohoma to "a dragon-fly drinking with its tail." Conf. also the tradition forming the subject of Sec. CLVI of the present translation.

¹⁸⁵ "To the Island of Onogoro," says Motowori; but we are not told that the god and goddess had ever left it.

¹⁸⁶ Ko means "infant" or "small." The original of the alternative personal name is Take-hi-gata-wake. Gata (or, without the nigori, Kata) here and in other names offers some difficulty. The translator renders it by the equivalent of the usual Japanese signification of the character 方, "direction," with which it is written.

¹⁸⁹ Hime signifies "princess" or "maiden." The original of the alternative personal name is Ame-hito-tsu-ne.

¹⁹⁰ Etymology uncertain. Motowori would take the name in a plural sense as standing for the modern islands of Hirado and Go-tō (Goto). The original of the alternative personal name is Ame-no-oshi-wo; in which as usual, oshi is supposed to represent ohoshi (大), "great."

¹⁹¹ Futa-go means "twins." The original of the alternative personal name is Ame-futa-ya.

SECTION VI.—BIRTH OF THE VARIOUS DEITIES

When they had finished giving birth to countries, they began afresh giving birth to Deities. So the name of the Deity they gave birth to was the Deity Great-Male-of-the-Great-Thing; ¹⁹² next they gave birth to the Deity Rock-Earth-Prince; ¹⁹³ next they gave birth to the Deity Rock-Nest-Princess; ¹⁹⁴ next they gave birth to the Deity Great-Door-Sun-Youth; ¹⁹⁵ next they gave birth to the Deity Heavenly-Blowing-Male; ¹⁹⁶ next they gave birth to the Deity Great-House-Prince; ¹⁹⁷ next they gave birth to the Deity Youth-of-the-Wind-Breath-the-Great-Male; ¹⁹⁸ next they gave birth to the Sea-Deity, whose name is the Deity Great-Ocean-Possessor; ¹⁹⁹ next they gave birth to the Deity of the Water-Gates, ²⁰⁰ whose name is the Deity Prince-of-Swift-Autumn; ²⁰¹ next they gave birth to his younger sister the Deity Princess-of-Swift-Autumn. (Ten Deities in all from the Deity-Great-Male-of-the-Great-Thing to the Deity Princess-of-Autumn.) ²⁰² The names of the Deities given birth to by these two Deities Prince-of-Swift-Autumn and [27] Princess-of-Swift-Autumn from their separate dominions of river and sea were: the Deity Foam-Calm; ²⁰³ next the Deity Foam-Waves; next the Deity Bubble-Calm; next the Deity Bubble-Waves; next the Deity Heavenly-Water-Divider; ²⁰⁴ next the Deity Earthly-

¹⁹² Oho-koto-oshi-wo-no-kami. "The Male-Enduring-Great-Things" would be a possible, but less good rendering. This god is identified by Motowori with Koto-take-no-wo mentioned in "One account" of the "Chronicles of Japan."

¹⁹⁴ Iha-zu-bime-no-kami. Here too Motowori takes the syllable zu- to be "connected with" the syllables tsu-tsu interpreted as above, forgetting apparently that the second tsu (ji) is said to occur only in the names of males.

¹⁹⁵ Oho-to-bi-wake-na-kami, a name which Motowori, by supposing corruptions of the text and by making a plentiful use of the pliant and powerful system of derivation with which the Japanese etymologists lay siege to the difficulties of their language, identifies with Oho-naho-bi-no-kami, "the Great-Rectifying-Wondrous-Deity," mentioned in Sect. X (Note 16).

¹⁹⁶ Ame-no-fuki-wo-no-kami, identified by Motowori with I-buki-do-nushi mentioned in the "Ritual of the General Purification." (See his Commentary on this Ritual, Vol. II, pp. 29-32.)

¹⁹⁷ Ohoyabikonokami, identified by Motowori with Oho-aya-tsui-bi mentioned in "One account" of the "Chronicles."

¹⁹⁸ Kaza-ge-tsu-wake-no-oshi-wo-no-kami. Motowori's conjectural interpretation has been followed; but both the reading and the meaning of the original are encompassed with difficulties. Motowori identifies this deity with Soko-sasura-hime mentioned in the "Ritual of the General Purification."

¹⁹⁹ Oho-wata-tsu-mi-no-kami. The interpretation of mochi, "possessor," though not absolutely sure, has for it the weight both of authority and of likelihood.

²⁰⁰ I.e., river-mouths, estuaries, or ports. In the original Minato-no-kami.

²⁰¹ Haya-aki-dzu-hiko. Aki, whose proper signification is "autumn," might also by metonymy be interpreted to mean "dragon-fly" or "Japan." Motowori, à propos of this name, launches forth on very bold derivations and identifications with the names of other gods. The original of the sister-deity is Haya-aki-dzu-hime-no-kami.

²⁰² The text here omits the word "Swift" from this name.

²⁰³ The original names of this deity and the three that follow are Awa-nagi-no-kami, Awa-nami-no-kami, Tsura-nagi-no-kami, and Tsura-nami, no-kami. The interpretation of the component parts is open to doubt but that here adopted has the authority of Motowori and Hirata.

²⁰⁴ Ame-no-mi-kumari-no-kami. The following deity is Kuni-nomi-kumari-no-kami.

Water-Divider; next the Deity Heavenly-Water-Drawing-Gourd-Possessor;²⁰⁵ next the Deity Earthly-Water-Drawing-Gourd-Possessor. (Eight Deities in all from the Deity Foam-Prince to the Deity Earthly-Water-Drawing-Gourd-Possessor.) Next they gave birth to the Deity of Wind, whose name is the Deity Prince-of-Long-Wind.²⁰⁶ Next they gave birth to the Deity of Trees, whose name is Deity Stem-Elder,²⁰⁷ next they gave birth to the Deity of Mountains, whose name is the Deity Great-Mountain-Possessor.²⁰⁸ Next they gave birth to the Deity of Moors, whose name is the Deity Thatch-Moor-Princess,²⁰⁹ another name for whom is the Deity Moor-Elder. (Four Deities in all from the Deity Prince-of Long-Wind to Moor-Elder.) The names of the Deities given [28] birth to by these two Deities, the Deity Great-Mountain-Possessor and the Deity Moor-Elder from their separate dominions of mountain and moor were: the Deity Heavenly-Elder-of-the-Passes; next the Deity Earthly-Elder-of-the-Passes;²¹⁰ next the Deity Heavenly-Pass-Boundary, next the Deity Earthly-Pass-Boundary;²¹¹ next the Deity Heavenly-Dark-Door; next the Deity Earthly Dark-Door;²¹² next the Deity Great-Vale-Prince; next the Deity Great-Vale-Princess.²¹³ (Eight Deities in all from the Deity Heavenly-Elder-of-the-Passes to the Deity Great-Vale-Princess.) The name of the Deity they²¹⁴ next gave birth to was the Deity Bird's-Rock-Camphor-tree-Boat,²¹⁵ another

²⁰⁵ This Deity and the next are in the original Ame-no-ku-hiza-mochi-no-kami and Kuni-ito-ku-hiza-mochi-no-kami. The etymology is obtained by comparison with a passage in the "Ritual for Averting Fire"

²⁰⁶ Shina-tsu-hiko-no-kami. The original of this name is explained by Motowori, who founds his view on two passages in the "Collection of a Myriad Leaves," to signify Prince-of-Long-Breath. But the translator feels confident that shi-na by him interpreted in the sense of "long breath" (or rather "long of breath") should be connected with shi, an old word for wind which we see in ara-shi ("storm-wind"), ni-shi ("west-wind"), hi-gashi ("east wind"), and perhaps under a slightly altered form in kaze, "wind," whereas shi nowhere occurs in the sense of "breath." Hirata notices approvingly this etymology of shi ("Exposition of the Ancient Histories," Vol. III. p. 63), though without venturing flatly to contradict his predecessor's decision as to the import of the name in question. The difference in the meaning is after all slight. Na is to be taken as an apocopated form of nagaki, "long." In later times Shinato has been used as a name for the north-west wind.

²⁰⁸ Oho-yama-tsunaka-mi.

²⁰⁹ Kaya-nu-kimi-no-kami. The etymology of the alternative personal name (in the original Nu-dzu-chi-no-kami is not quite certain.

²¹⁰ The original of these two names is Ame-no-sa-dzu-chi-no-kami and Kuni-no-sa-dzu-chi-no-kami. Their signification is obscure, but the translator has, after some hesitation, followed Motowori's interpretation. The words "heavenly" and "earthly" should probably be considered as qualifying "passes." This word "pass," used here and elsewhere to render the Japanese term saka (sa), must be understood to include lesser ascents than those very arduous ones which are alone denoted by the word "pass" in ordinary English parlance. In the later language of Japan the word tauge (tōge) generally denotes "passes" properly so called, while saka is restricted to the meaning of small ascents or hills. But this distinction is by no means strictly observed.

²¹¹ Ame-no-sa-giri-no-kami and Kuni-no-sagiri-no-kami. Sa seems to be rightly considered, as in the two preceding names, to be an archaic form of saka (properly sa-ka, "hill-place"), and giri as an apocopated form of kagiri, (properly ka-giri, "place-cutting") "limit" or "boundary". Hirata however, following the Chinese character with which kiri is written, interprets it in the sense of "mist."

²¹² Ame-no-kura-do-no-kami and Kuni-no-kura-do-no-kami. Motowori explains kura (闇, "dark") by tani (谷, "valley"), and to "door" by tokoro (處, "place").

name for whom is the Heavenly-Bird-Boat. Next they gave birth to the Deity Princess-of-Great-Food.²¹⁶ Next they gave birth to the Fire-Burning-Swift-Male-Deity,²¹⁷ another name for whom is the Deity Fire-Shining-Prince, and another name is the Deity Fire-Shining-Elder.

²¹⁵ I.e., the Prince-Who-Invites and the Princess-Who-Invites (Izanagi and Iza-nami).

²¹⁶ Homonymous with the alternative personal name of the Island of Aha. (See Sect. V, Note 8).

SECTION VII.—RETIREMENT OF HER AUGUSTNESS THE PRINCESS-WHO-INVITES

Through giving birth to this child her august private parts were burnt, and she sickened and lay down. ²¹⁸ The names of the Deities born from her vomit were the Deity Metal-Mountain-Prince and next the Deity Metal-Mountain-Princess. ²¹⁹ The names of the Deities that were born from her faeces were the Deity Clay-Viscid-Prince and next the Deity Clay-Viscid-Princess. ²²⁰ The names of the Deities that were next born from her urine were the Deity Mitsuhanome ²²¹ and next the Young-Wondrous-Producing-Deity. ²²² The child of this Deity was called the Deity Luxuriant-Food-Princess. ²²³ So the Deity [30] the Female-Who-Invites, through giving birth to the Deity-of-Fire, at length divinely retired. ²²⁴ (Eight Deities in all from the Heavenly-Bird-Boat to the Deity Luxuriant-Food-Princess. ²²⁵)

The total number of islands given birth to jointly by the two Deities the Male-Who-Invites and the Female-Who-Invites was fourteen, and of Deities thirty-five. (These are such as were given birth to before the Deity Princess-Who-Invites divinely retired. Only the Island of Onogoro, was not given birth to. ²²⁶ and moreover the Leech-Child ²²⁷ and the Island of Aha are not reckoned among the children).

So then His Augustness the Male-Who-Invites said: Oh! Thine Augustness my lovely younger sister! Oh that I should have exchanged thee for this single child!" ²²⁸ And as he ²¹⁸ "Lying down" (koyasu) is a term often used in the Archaic language in the sense of "dying." But here it must be taken literally, the death ("divine retirement") of the goddess being narrated a few lines further on.

²²⁰ Hani-yasu-biko-no-kami and Hani-yasu-bime-no-kami.

²²¹ The signification of this name is not to be ascertained. In the text it is written phonetically 彌都波能賣, and two passages in the "Chronicles," where this deity is mentioned as 爲嚴罔象女 and 水名水神罔象女 with directions in each case to read the name with the sounds here given to it, do not help us much, except in so far as they show that Mitsuhanome was conceived of as the deity of water and as a female.

²²² Waku-musu-bi-no-kami.

²²³ Toyo-uke-bime-no-kami.

²²⁴ I.e., "died."

²²⁶ See Sect. III. This island was not born, but arose, spontaneously from drops of brine.

²²⁷ Hiru-go. See the latter part of Sect. IV for these two names, Hiru-go was not counted among the children of these Deities for the reason that the latter abandoned him as soon as he was born, he being a failure. The reason for omitting Aha from the computation is not so clear.

²²⁸ The text here is very peculiar, the characters 子之一木 rendered "single child" being where we should expect 子之一人 or 子一人. Hirata proposes to consider 木, "tree," while most scholars agree in reading ke instead of ki in this place, as phonetic for ke (毛) "hair," and to interpret the god's words to signify that he values the child no more than a single hair in comparison with the wife whom that child's birth has lost crept round her august pillow, and as he crept round her august feet and wept, there was born from his august tears the Deity that dwells at Konomoto near Unewo on Mount Kagu,²²⁹ and whose name is the Crying-Weeping-Female-Deity.²³⁰ So he buried the divinely retired²³¹ Deity the Female-Who-Invites on Mount Hiba²³² at the boundary of the Land of Idzumo²³³ and the Land of Hahaki.²³⁴ for him. Moribe, in his "Examination of Difficult Words." s.v. Ko no hito-tsu ki (Vol. I. p. 8 et seq.), ingeniously argues that ki was an old native Japanese "Auxiliary Numeral" for animals, afterwards driven out by the somewhat like-sounding Chinese word hiki (匹) which is now in common use, and that the god employs this degrading Auxiliary Numeral in speaking of his child on account of the resentment which he feels against him.

On the other hand we gather from the "Chronicles of Japan Explained" that 木 was used in its natural sense as an "Auxiliary Numeral" for gods and for men of exalted rank. This seems to the translator the better view to follow, and it is supported by the use of p. 35 桂 hashira, as the regular "Auxiliary Numeral" for divine personages. The parallel passage in the "Chronicles" has simply 一兒 "one infant."

²²⁹ This rendering is but tentative; for it is not certain that Hirata, whose view has been adopted, is right in regarding Konomoto and Unewo as names of places. If we followed the older authorities, we should have to translate thus: "The Deity that dwells at the foot of the trees on the slope of the spur of Mount Kagu." The etymology of the name of this celebrated mountain (known also as Ame-no-kagu-yama or Ama-no-kagu-yama, i.e. "Heavenly Mount Kagu") is disputed. But Hirata's view, according to which it should be connected with kago, "deer," is the most plausible. If it were established, we should be tempted to follow him in rendering by "deer-possessor" the name of the deity Kagu-tsu-chi, of whom were born the eight gods of mountains, and whose slaying forms the title of the next section. That the fire-deity should be connected with the mountain-deities, and thereby with the deer who roam about the mountains and furnish the hunter with a motive for penetrating into their recesses, is of course but natural. The character 香 with which Kagu is written signifies "fragrant"; but it has been suggested that the Japanese word may be connected with an expression signifying "heaven-descended," in allusion to the supposed origin of the mountain as related in an old geographical work (now lost) treating of the Province of Iyo.

²³⁰ Naki-saha-me-no-kami. The sense of the second word of the compound is "marsh" or "stream but

Motowori seems right in considering the character 澤 to be here used phonetically as an abbreviation of isaha from isatsu, "to weep."

²³¹ i.e., dead.

²³² Etymology uncertain.

²³³ For this name see Sect. XIX, Note 6.

²³⁴ Etymology uncertain.

SECTION VIII.—THE SLAYING OF THE FIRE-DEITY

Then His Augustness the Male-Who-invites, drawing the ten-grasp sabre ²³⁵ that was augustly girded on him, cut off the head of his child the Deity Shining-Elder. Hereupon the names of the Deities that were born from the blood that stuck to the point of the august sword and bespattered the multitudinous rock-misses were: the Deity Rock-Splitter, ²³⁶ next the Deity Root-Splitter, next the Rock-Possessing-Male-Deity. ²³⁷ The names of the Deities that were next born from the blood that stuck to the upper part ²³⁸ of the august sword and again bespattered the multitudinous rock-masses were: the Awfully-Swift-Deity, ²³⁹ next the Fire-Swift-Deity, ²⁴⁰ next the Brave-Awful-Possessing-Male-Deity, ²⁴¹ another name for whom is the Brave-Snapping-Deity, ²⁴² and another name is the Luxuriant-Snapping Deity. The names of the Deities that were next born from the blood that collected on the hilt of the august sword and leaked out between his fingers were: the Deity Kura-okami and next the Deity Kura-mitsuha. ²⁴³

All the eight Deities in the above list, from the Deity Rock-Splitter to the Deity Kura-mitsuha, are Deities that were born from the august sword.

The name of the Deity that was born from the head of the Deity Shining-Elder, who had been slain was the Deity Possessor-of-the-True-Pass-Mountains. ²⁴⁴ The name of the Deity that was next born from his chest was the Deity Possessor-of-Descent-Mountains. ²⁴⁵ The name of the Deity that was next born from his belly was the Deity Possessor-of-the-Innermost-Mountains. ²⁴⁶ The name of the Deity that was next born

²³⁵ One "grasp" is defined as "the breadth of four fingers when the hand is clenched," so that the meaning intended to be conveyed is of a big sabre ten hand-breadths long. The length of sabres and of beards was measured by such "grasps" or "hand-breadths."

²³⁶ The original names of this deity and the next are Iha-saku-no-kami and Ne-saki-no-kami.

²³⁸ Explained by reference to the parallel passage of the "Chronicles" through a character signifying "the knob at the end of the guard of the sword."—(Williams' "Syllabic Dictionary.")

²³⁹ Mika-haya-bi-no-kami. Motowori seems to be right in regarding mika as equivalent to ika, the root of ikameshiki, "stern," "awful," and bi as the root of buru, a verbalising suffix.

²⁴⁰ Hi-haya-bi-no-kami.

²⁴¹ Take-mika-dzu-chi-no-wo-no-kami, written with the characters 建御雷之男神. The translator has without much hesitation followed Motowori's interpretation.

²⁴² Take-futsu-no-kami. The text name is Toyo-futsu-no-kami. Futsu is interpreted in the sense of "the sound of snapping" by reference to a Passage in the "Chronicles" where it occurs written both ideographically and phonetically in the name of the deity Futsu-no-mi-tama.

²⁴³ The etymology of both these name is obscure. Kura, the first element of each compound, signifies "dark."

²⁴⁴ This is the explanation of the original name Ma-saka-yama-tsu-mi-no-kami which is given in the "Secret of the Chronicles of Japan," and is approved by the later commentators.

²⁴⁵ Odo-yama-tsu-mi-no-kami. The English rendering is uncertain, as it rests only on a conjecture of Motowori's, deriving odo from ori do (下處), "descending place," "way down."

from his private parts was the Deity Possessor-of-the-Dark-Mountains. The name of the Deity that was next born from his left hand ²⁴⁷ was the Deity Possessor-of-the-Dense[ly-Wooded]-Mountains. The name of the Deity that was next born from his right hand²⁴⁸ was the Deity Possessor-of-the-Outlying, Mountains. The name of the Deity that was next born from his left foot ²⁴⁹ was the Deity Possessor-of-the-Moorland-Mountains. The name of the Deity that was next born from his right foot²⁵⁰ was the Deity Possessor-of-the-Outer-Mountains. (Eight Deities in all from the Deity Possessor-of-the-True-Pass-Mountains to the Deity Possessor-of-the-Outer-Mountains). So the name of the sword with which [the Male-Who-Invites] cut off [his son's head] was Heavenly-Point-Blade-Extended, and another name was Majestic Point-Blade-Extended. ²⁵¹ hills or first visibly rising ground forming the approach to an actual mountain-range. The signification of to in the last name of the set is disputed. Mabuchi takes it in the sense of "gate." The translator prefers Motowori's view: but after all, the difference in meaning does not amount to much. A third derivation proposed by Motowori is tawa-yama, i.e. "mountains with folds."

²⁴⁷ Or "arm."

²⁴⁸ Or "arm."

²⁴⁹ Or "leg."

²⁵⁰ Or "leg."

²⁵¹ These two names are in the original Ame-no-wo-ha-bori and Itsu-no-wo-ha-bori. Their import is not absolutely clear, but they seem to designate a weapon broad towards the point, such as is represented in the illustrations given in Vol. I, pp. 19-20 and Vol. II, pp. 4-5 of the "Tokiha-Gusa."

SECTION IX.—THE LAND OF HADES

Thereupon [His Augustness the Male Who-Invites], wishing to meet and see his younger sister Her Augustness the Female-Who-Invites, followed after her to the Land of Hades.²⁵² So when from the palace she raised the door and came out to meet him,²⁵³ His Augustness the Male-Who-Invites spoke, saying: "Thine Augustness my lovely younger sister! the lands that I and thou made are not yet finished making; so come back!" Then Her Augustness the Female-Who-Invites answered, saying: "Lamentable indeed that thou earnest not sooner! I have eaten of the furnace of Hades.²⁵⁴ Nevertheless, as I reverence²⁵⁵ the entry here of Thine Augustness my lovely elder brother, I wish to return.²⁵⁶ Moreover²⁵⁷ I will discuss it particularly with the Deities of Hades.²⁵⁸ Look not at me!" Having thus spoken, she went back inside the palace; and as she tarried there very long, he could not wait. So having taken and broken off one of the end-teeth²⁵⁹ of the multitudinous and close-toothed comb stuck in the ²⁵² The characters in the original which are here rendered Hades are 黄泉, lit. "Yellow Stream," a Chinese name for the Underworld to which a remark of Mencius and a story in the "Tso Chuan" appear to have given rise. They here represent the Japanese word Yomo or Yomi, which we find phonetically written with the characters 豫母 in the name of Yomo-tsu-shiko-me a little further on, and which is defined by Motowori as "an underworld,.... the habitation of the dead,.... the land whither, when they die, go all men, whether noble or mean, virtuous or wicked." The orthodox Japanese derivation of Yomi is from Yoru, "night," which would give us for Yomo-tsu-kuni some such rendering as "the Land of Gloom." A suggestion quoted by Arawi Hakuseki ("Tōga," art. Idzumi) that the word may really be but a mispronunciation of Yama, the Sanscrit name of the Buddhist god of hell, is however worthy of consideration; but it seems best on the whole to translate Yomi or Yomo by "Hades," a term which is itself of uncertain derivation, and the signification attached to which closely resembles the Japanese Shintō notion of the world beyond, or rather beneath, the grave.

²⁵⁴ i.e. "of the food of Hades." It would be more obvious (following the text) to translate "I have eaten in the doors [i.e. in the house] of Hades;—but the character 戸 in this place stands almost certainly for 竈, "a place for cooking," "a furnace."

²⁵⁵ The word kashikoshi (恐), here translated "reverence," exactly corresponds to the modern polite idiom osore-iri-mashita, for which there is no precise equivalent in English, but which conveys some such sentiment as "I am overpowered by the honour you do me," "I am sorry you should have taken the trouble."

²⁵⁶ Q.d. "with thee to the land of the living."

²⁵⁷ The original here has the character 且 which signifies "moreover" as in this translation, and Motowori's proposed emendation to 且 has for it the authority of no manuscript or earlier printed edition. In his "Records of Ancient Matters with the Ancient Reading" he actually substitutes this very new reading, accompanying it in kana with the Japanese words ashita ni, "in the morning." But what is to become of the text if we are at liberty to alter it to suit our convenience,—for there is more than one other passage where 且 is similarly used?

²⁵⁹ Literally "the male pillar," i.e. the large tooth of which there is one at each end of the comb.

august left bunch [of his hair], he lit one light ²⁶⁰ and went in and looked. Maggots were swarming, and [she was] rotting, and in her head dwelt the Great-Thunder, in her breast dwelt the Fire-Thunder, in her left hand ²⁶¹ dwelt the Young-Thunder, in her right hand ²⁶² dwelt the Earth-Thunder, in her left foot ²⁶³ dwelt the Rumbling-Thunder, in her right foot ²⁶⁴ dwelt the Couchant-Thunder:—altogether eight Thunder-Deities had been born and dwelt there. ²⁶⁵ Hereupon His Augustness the Male-Who-Invites, overawed at the sight, fled back, whereupon his younger sister Her Augustness the Female-Who-Invites said: "Thou hast put me to shame," and at once sent the Ugly-Female-of-Hades ²⁶⁶ to pursue him. So His Augustness the Male-Who-Invites took his black august head-dress ²⁶⁷ and cast it down, and it instantly turned into grapes. While she picked them up and ate them, he fled on; but as she still pursued him, he took and broke the multitudinous and close-toothed comb in the right bunch [of his hair] and cast it down, and it instantly turned into bamboo-sprouts. While she pulled them up and ate them, he fled on. Again later [his Younger sister] sent the eight Thunder-Deities with a thousand and five hundred warriors of Hades to pursue him. So he, drawing the ten-grasp sabre that was augustly girded on him, fled forward brandishing it in his back hand; ²⁶⁸ and as they still pursued, he took, on reaching the base of the Even Pass of Hades, ²⁶⁹ three peaches that were growing at its base, and waited and smote [his pursuers therewith], so that they all fled back. Then His Augustness the Male-Who-Invites announced to the peaches: "Like as ye have helped me, so must ye help all living people ²⁷⁰ in the Central Land of Reed-Plains ²⁷¹ when they shall fall into troublous ²⁶⁰ The use of the expression "lit one light," where it would have been more natural to say simply "lit [a] light," is explained by a gloss in the "Chronicles," which informs us that "at the present day" the lighting of a single light is considered unlucky, as is also the throwing away of a comb at night-time. It is allowed that the gloss is a late addition, and its statement might perhaps be considered a mere invention made to account for the peculiar expression in the text. Motowori tells us however that "it is said by the natives" that these actions are still (latter part of 18th century) considered unlucky in the province of Ihami, and the same superstition also survives, as the translator is assured, in Yedo itself. It is to be understood that it was the large tooth broken off from the comb which the god lighted.

²⁶¹ Or "arm."

²⁶² Or "arm."

²⁶³ Or "leg."

²⁶⁴ Or "leg."

²⁶⁵ The Japanese names of the eight Thunder-Deities are: Oho-ikadzuchi, Ho-no-ikadzuchi, Kuro-ikadzuchi, Saka-ikadzuchi, Waki-ikadzuchi, Tsuchi-ikadzuchi, Naru-ikadzuchi, and Fushi-ikadzuchi. Moribe in his Critique on Motowori's Commentary, has some observation on the appropriateness of each of these names which the student will do well to consult if the work should be published.

²⁶⁶ Yomo-tsu-shiko-me.

²⁶⁷ We might perhaps with equal propriety render by "wreath" the word here translated head-dress,—leaves and flowers having been the earliest ornaments for the hair. In later time, however, it has been used p. 43 to designate any sort of head-dress, and that is also the dictionary meaning of the Chinese character with which it is written. The Japanese words for "head-dress" and "creeper" are homonymous, and indeed the former is probably but a specialised acceptance of the latter.

²⁶⁸ I.e., brandishing it behind him.

circumstances and be harassed!"—and he gave [to the peaches] the designation of Their Augustnesses Great-Divine-Fruit.²⁷² Last of all his younger sister Her Augustness the Princess-Who-Invites came out herself in pursuit. So he drew a thousand-draught rock,²⁷³ and [with it] blocked up the Even Pass of Hades, and placed the rock in the middle; and they stood opposite to one another and exchanged leave-takings;²⁷⁴ and Her Augustness the Female-Who-Invites said: "My lovely elder brother, thine Augustness! If thou do like this, I will in one day strangle to death a thousand of the folks of thy land." Then His Augustness the Male-Who-Invites replied: "My lovely younger sister, Thine Augustness! If thou do this, I will in one day set up a thousand and five hundred parturition-houses.²⁷⁵ In this manner each day a thousand people would surely be born." So Her Augustness the Female-Who-Invites is called the Great-Deity-of-Hades.²⁷⁶ Again it is said that, owing to her having pursued and reached [her elder brother], she is called the Road-Reaching-Great-Deity.²⁷⁷ Again the rock with which he blocked up the Pass of Hades is called the Great-Deity-of-the-Road-Turning-back,²⁷⁸ and again it is called the Blocking-Great-Deity-of-the-Door-of-Hades.²⁷⁹ So what was called the Even-Pass-of-Hades is now called the Ifuya-Pass²⁸⁰ in the Land of Idzumo.

of their native land was imitated from that of China.—everything Chinese being an abomination in the sight of these ardent Shintoists. Yamazaki Suiga, as quoted by. Tanigaha Shisei, is more sensible when he remarks that each country naturally considers itself central and foreign countries barbarous and that Japan is not peculiar in being looked on by its inhabitants as the centre of the universe. This is also the view taken by the other earlier scholars.

²⁷² Oho-kamu-dzumi-no-mikoto. The difference between Singular and Plural is not often present to the Japanese mind, and though there were three peaches, we might just as well render their name by the words "His Augustness, etc.," considering the three as forming together but one divinity. The interpretation of the name here adopted is the simple and natural one which Motowori borrowed from Tanigaha Shisei.

²⁷³ I.e., a rock which it would take a thousand men to lift.

²⁷⁴ That some kind of leave-taking and separation is intended seems certain; but the precise import of the characters 度事戸 in the text is not to be ascertained. Motowori's "Commentary, Vol. VI, pp. 29-30 and Vol. X, pp. 52-55, should be consulted for an elaborate discussion of the various interpretations which they may be made to bear. Moribe, in his Critique on this Commentary, argues that "divorced each other" is the proper signification of the words, and supports his opinion by the Parallel passage of the "Chronicles."

²⁷⁹ Sayari-masu-yomi-do-no-oho-kami.

²⁸⁰ Ifuya-zaka. Moribe in his "Idzu-no-chi-waki" conjectures that Ifuya may be derived from Yufu-yami, "evening darkness," an etymology which has at least the merit of suiting the legend.

SECTION X.—THE PURIFICATION OF THE AUGUST PERSON

Therefore the Great Deity the Male-Who-Invites said: "Nay! hideous! I have come to a hideous and polluted land,—I have!"²⁸¹ So I will perform the purification of my august person." So he went out to a plain [covered with] *ahagi*²⁸² at a small river-mouth near Tachibana²⁸³ in Himuka²⁸⁴ in [the island of] Tsukushi, and purified and cleansed himself. So the name of the Deity that was born from the august staff which he threw down was the Deity Thrust-Erect-Come-Not-Place.²⁸⁵ The name of [40] the Deity that was born from the august girdle which he next threw down was the Deity Road-Long-Space.²⁸⁶

The name of the Deity that was born from the august skirt which he next threw down was the Deity Loosen-Put.²⁸⁷ The name of the Deity that was born from the august upper garment which he next threw down was the Deity Master-of-Trouble.²⁸⁸ The name of the Deity that was born from the august trousers which he next threw down was the Road-Fork-Deity.²⁸⁹ The name of the Deity that was born from the august hat which he next threw down was the Deity Master-of-the-Open-Mouth.²⁹⁰ The names of the Deities that were born from the bracelet of his august left hand²⁹¹ which he next ²⁸¹ The words "I have" thus repeated are an attempt to render the concluding words ari keri of the sentence in the original, by which, though they have no particular sense, the author evidently set great store, as he writes them syllabically. They may be considered to emphasize what goes before and, says Motowori, "convey the idea of lamentation." The idiom occurs some half-dozen times in the course of the present work.

²⁸² This botanical name is identified by Arawi Hakuseki and Hirata with the modern hagi, or "bushclover" (lespedeza of various species). The received opinion used to be that the awoki (Aucuba Japonica) was here intended.

²⁸³ Tachibana is understood to be the general designation of trees of the orange tribe. (See however Sect. LXXIV, Note 7). Here it is used as a proper name.

²⁸⁴ This name, which signifies "sun-confronting," was not unnaturally bestowed on a province in the eastern part of the westernmost of the larger Japanese islands, as it might well be conceived as lying "opposite the sun." It has, however, been supposed to have originally denoted the whole of the island in question. In any case the name is not inappropriate, as the island has a long eastern sea-board.

²⁸⁵ In our text Tsuki-tatsu-funa-do. But funa should almost certainly be ku-na, and the name (which has here been translated accordingly) is then illustrated by the more extended version of this myth which is given in the "Chronicles," where we read that the god (probably addressing his sister) threw down his staff with the words: "Come no further." "Stand" must be understood in a Transitive sense: the god stood his staff up by thrusting it into the sand.

²⁸⁶ This is Moribe's explanation ("Idzu-no-Chi-waki." Vol. IV, p. 44) of the meaning of the original name Michi-no-naga-chiha-no-kami, the syllable ha of which is considered by him to be an alternative form of ma (間, "space"). It is however a great crux, and Motowori confesses his inability to explain it satisfactorily. Other views as to the import of the syllable in question will be found in the "Jin-dai no maki Mo-shiho-gusa." Vol. II. p. 29.

²⁸⁷ This seems to be the meaning of the original name, if we retain the reading Toki-okashi-no-kami. See however Motowori's remarks in loco.

²⁸⁸ Wadzura-hi-no-ushi-no-kami.

²⁸⁹ Chi-mata-no-kami.

²⁹⁰ Aki-guhi-no-ushi-no-kami. The English rendering of this obscure name proceeds on the assumption that Motowori is correct when he proposes to consider kuhi as equivalent in this place to kuchi, "mouth." The gaping trousers no longer filled by the deity's legs would perhaps suggest the idea of an open mouth, though it is true that this is not the deity said to have been actually born from that portion of the attire.

threw down were the Deities Offing-Distant, ²⁹² next the Deity Wash-Prince-of-the-Offing, next the Deity Intermediate-Direction-of-the-Offing. The names of the Deities that were born from the bracelet of his august right hand which he next threw down were: the Deity Shore-Distant, next the Deity Wash-Prince-of-the-Shore, next the Deity Intermediate-Direction-of-the-Shore.

The twelve Deities mentioned in the foregoing ²⁹³ list from the Deity Come-Not-Place down to the Deity Intermediate-Direction-of-the-Shore are Deities that were born from his taking off the things that were on his person.

Thereupon saying: "The water in the upper reach is [too] rapid; the water in the lower reach is [too] sluggish," he went down and plunged in the middle reach; and, as he washed, there was first born the Wondrous-Deity-of-Eighty-Evils, and next the Wondrous-Deity-of-Great-Evils. ²⁹⁴ These two Deities are the Deities that were born from the filth [he contracted] when he went to that polluted, hideous land. ²⁹⁵ The names of the Deities that were next born to rectify those evils were: the Divine-Rectifying-Wondrous Deity, next the Great-Rectifying-Wondrous-Deity, ²⁹⁶ next the Female-Deity-Idzu. ²⁹⁷ The names of the Deities that were next born, as he bathed at the bottom of the water, were: the Deity Possessor-of-the-Ocean-Bottom, ²⁹⁸ and next His Augustness Elder-Male-of-the-Bottom. The names of the Deities that were born as he bathed in the middle [of the water] were: the Deity Possessor-of-the-Ocean-Middle, and next His Augustness Elder-Male-of-the-Middle. The names of the Deities that were born as he bathed at the top of the water were the Deity Possessor-of-the-Ocean-Surface, and next His Augustness Elder-Male-of-the-Surface. These three Ocean-Possessing Deities are the Deities held in reverence as their ancestral Deities by the Chiefs of Adzumi. ²⁹⁹ So the Chiefs of Adzumi are the descendants of His Augustness Utsushi-hi-

²⁹² The names of this deity and the five who follow are in the original Oki-zakaru-no-kami, Oki-tsu-nagisa-biko-no-kami, Oki-tsu-kahi-bera-no-kami, He-zakaru-no-kami, He-tsu-nagisa-biko-no-kami and He-tsu-kahi-bera-no-kami. The word "wash," by which for want of a better one the Substantive nagisa has been rendered, must be understood to signify the part nearest to the strand of the sea or of a river,—the boundary of the waves. The third and sixth of this set of names, in which the syllables kahi-bera (here represented by "Intermediate Direction") offer a good deal of difficulty, have been translated in accordance with Motowori's explanation of their probable meaning.

²⁹⁴ The names of these two deities in the original are Ya-so-maga-tsu-bi-no-kami and Oho-maga-tsu-bi-no-kami.

²⁹⁵ Viv. to Hades.

²⁹⁶ The names of these two deities in the original are Kamu-naho-bi-no-kami and Oho-na-ho-bi-no-kami.

²⁹⁷ Idzu-no-me-no-kami. The word Idzu is incomprehensible, unless indeed, following Motowori, we identify this goddess with the god and goddess Haya-aki-dzu-hiko and Haya-aki-dsu-hime mentioned in Sect. VI, Note 10, and consider idzu as standing by apheresis for aki-dsu.

²⁹⁸ The original names of this deity and the five who follow are Soko-tsu-wata-tsu-mi-no-kami, Soko-dzutsu-no-wo-no-mi-koto, Naka-tsu-wata-tsu-mi-no-kami, Naka-dzutsu-no-wo-mikoto, Uha-tsu-wata-tsu-mi-no-kami, and Uha-dzutsu-no-wo-no-mikoto. There is the usual doubt as to the signification to be assigned to the syllable tsu in the second, fourth and last of these names. If it really means, not "elder" but "possessor," we should be obliged to translate by "the Bottom-Possessing-Male." etc.

²⁹⁹ Adumi-no-murazhi. This name is said by Motowori to be taken from that of a place in the province of Shinano. But Moribe shows that p. 49 at any rate the etymology of the word may be traced to ama-tsu-mochi, "Possessors of fishermen."

gana-saku, ³⁰⁰ a child of these Ocean-Possessing Deities. ³⁰¹These three Deities His Augustness Elder-Male-of-the-Bottom, His Augustness Elder-Male-of-the-Middle, and His Augustness Elder-Male-of-the-Surface are the three Great Deities of the Inlet of Sumi. ³⁰² The name of the Deity that was born as he thereupon washed his left august eye was the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity. ³⁰³ The name of the Deity that was next born as he washed his right august eye was His Augustness, Moon-Night Possessor. ³⁰⁴ The name of the Deity that was next born as he washed his august nose was His Brave-Swift-impetuous-Male-Augustness. ³⁰⁵

The fourteen Deities in the foregoing list from the Wondrous-Deity-of-Eighty-Evils down to His Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness are Deities born from the bathing of his august person.

³⁰⁰ It is impossible to translate this name which, according to Motowori, is derived from those of two districts in Shinano to which the word utsushi (for utsutsu, "present" or "living") is prefixed.

³⁰¹ Attention must again be drawn to the vagueness of the Japanese perception of the distinction between Singular and Plural. As three deities are particularly and repeatedly mentioned in the foregoing text, we are forced to translate this passage in the Plural; and yet how could one child have three fathers?

³⁰² Sumi-no-ye, also called Sumi-yoshi, i.e., by a play upon words, "pleasant to dwell in." The real etymology of sumi is not certain.—Instead of "the three Great Deities," we might translate by "the Great Deities of the Three Shrines."

³⁰³ Ama-terasu-oho-mi-kami (天照大御神). The reading terasu, which is established by the authority of the "Collection of a Myriad Leaves" and by almost universal usage, must not mislead the student into imagining that the Verb, because it is Causative in form, has a Causative meaning which would require some such English translation as "Heaven-Illuminating." The Causative form is simply Honorific, and the two words ama terasu signify, as Motowori explains, "shining in heaven."

³⁰⁴ Tsuki-yomi-no-kami. There is no doubt as to a moon-god being intended, but the precise import of the name is disputed. The translator has followed Mabuchi's view as quoted by Motowori, and which is supported by the fact that, from classical times down to the present day, tsuku-yo or tsuki-yo has been a word in common use to denote a fine moonlight night. If we were to take yomi as one word, we should have to render it either by "Moon-Hades" or by "Moon-Darkness," which seem less appropriate designations, though still of plain enough intent. The characters 月讀, 月弓 and 月夜見, with which the name is variously written, seem all phonetic unless we might take the second set to mean the crescent (lit. "moon-bow").

³⁰⁵ Take-haya-susa-no-wo-no-mikoto. Susa, which is sometimes read Sosa, is rendered by the word "impetuous" in accordance with Mabuchi's View as quoted by Motowori. The first member of this compound name is frequently omitted.

SECTION XI.—INVESTITURE OF THE THREE DEITIES; THE ILLUSTRIOUS AUGUST CHILDREN

At this time His Augustness the Male-Who-Invites greatly rejoiced, saying; "I, begetting child after child, have at my final begetting gotten. three illustrious children," [with which words,] at once jinglingly taking off and shaking the jewel-string ³⁰⁶ forming his august necklace, he bestowed it on the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity, saying: "Do Thine Augustness rule the Plain-of-High-Heaven." With this charge he bestowed it on her. Now the name of this august necklace was the August-Store-house-Shelf-Deity. ³⁰⁷ Next he said of His Augustness Moon-Night-Possessor: "Do Thine Augustness rule the Dominion of the "Night." ³⁰⁸ Thus he charged him. Next he said to His-Brave-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness: "Do Thine Augustness rule the Sea-Plain." ³⁰⁹ ³⁰⁶ I.e., "the string of jewels." For these so-called "jewels" see Introduction, p. xxxi.

³⁰⁷ Mi-kura-tana-no-kami. Motowori comments on this name by saying that the necklace was doubtless so precious, that it was carefully kept by the goddess on a shelf in her store-house.

³⁰⁸ Yoru-no-wosu-kuni.

³⁰⁹ Una-bara.

SECTION XII.—THE CRYING AND WEEPING OF HIS IMPETUOUS-MALE-AUGUSTNESS

So while [the other two Deities] each [assumed his and her] rule according to the command with which [their father] had deigned to charge them, His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness did not [assume the] rule [of] the dominion with which he had been charged, but cried and wept till his eight-grasp beard ³¹⁰ reached to the pit of his stomach. ³¹¹ The fashion of his weeping was such as by his weeping to wither the green mountains into withered mountains, and by his weeping to dry up all the rivers and seas. ³¹² For this reason the sound of bad Deities was like unto the flies in the fifth moon ³¹³ as they all swarmed, ³¹⁴ and in all things ³¹⁵ every portent of woe arose. So the Great August Deity the Male-Who-Invites said to His Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness: "How is it that, instead of ruling the land with which I charged thee, thou dost wail and weep?" He replied, saying: "I ³¹⁶ wail because I wish to depart to my deceased mother's ³¹⁷ land, to the Nether Distant Land." ³¹⁸ Then the Great August Deity the Male-Who-Invites was very angry and said: "If that be so, thou shall not dwell in this land," ³¹⁹ and forthwith expelled him with a divine expulsion. So the Great Deity the Male-Who-Invites dwells at Taga ³²⁰ in Afumi. ³²¹

³¹⁰ See Sect. VIII, Note 1.

³¹¹ Lit, "in front of his heart,"

³¹² Sic in the original, to the perplexity of commentators.

³¹³ "Flies in the fifth moon" is the received interpretation of the original term sa-bahe. Conf. sa-tsuki, the old native name for the fifth moon.

³¹⁴ The text has here the character 満, "to be full," for which Motowori somewhat arbitrarily reads 涌, "to bubble up," taking this word in the sense of swarming. The translator has endeavoured to preserve the vagueness of the original Japanese, which leaves it doubtful at first sight whether the flies or the deities should be regarded as the logical subject of the Verb. There is an almost identical passage near the beginning of Sect. XVI.

³¹⁵ Lit. "a myriad things," a Chinese phrase for totality.

³¹⁶ The Chinese character for the First-Personal Pronoun used here p. 52 and below by this deity is the humble one 僕 signifying literally "servant" The commentators read it simply "I."

³¹⁷ I.e., Hades. The translation follows Motowori's explanation of the original term Ne-no-kata-su-kuni, which is obscure.

³¹⁸ The Japanese authorities simply read "mother." But the character 妣, which is used in this place, specially designates a mother who is deceased.

³¹⁹ I.e., say the commentators, "in this realm of ocean which I granted to thee as thy domain." Probably, however, this is reading into the text more than it was meant to contain.

³²⁰ Derivation unknown.

³²¹ From aha-umi, "fresh sea," i.e., "lake." The province of Afumi was doubtless so called from Lake Biha which occupies a great portion of its surface. It is also known as Chiku-tsu-Afumi, i.e., "the Nearer Afumi," in contradistinction to Toho-tsu-fumi (in modern pronunciations Tôtômi), i.e., "Distant Afumi," a province further to the East. The modern pronunciation of Afumi is Omi.

SECTION XIII.—THE AUGUST OATH

So thereupon His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness said: "If that be so, I will take leave ³²² of the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity, and depart." [With these words] he forthwith went up to Heaven, whereupon all the mountains and rivers shook, and every land and country quaked. So the Heaven-Shining-Great-August Deity, alarmed at the noise, said: 'The reason of the ascent hither of His Augustness my elder brother ³²³ is surely no good intent. ³²⁴ It is only that he wishes to wrest my land from me.' And she forthwith, unbinding her august hair, twisted it into august bunches; and both into the left and into the right august bunch, as likewise into her august head-dress and likewise on to her left and her right august arm, ³²⁵ she twisted an augustly complete [string] of curved jewels eight feet [long],—of five hundred jewels, ³²⁶ and slinging on her back a quiver holding a thousand [arrows], and adding [thereto] ³²⁷ a quiver holding five hundred [arrows], she likewise took and slung at her side a mighty and high [-sounding] elbow-pad, ³²⁸ and brandished and stuck her bow upright so that the top ³²⁹ shook, and she stamped her feet into the hard ground up to her opposing thighs, ³³⁰ kicking away [the earth] like rotten snow, ³³¹ and stood valiantly like unto a mighty man, and waiting, asked: "Wherefore ascendest thou hither?" Then His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness replied, saying: "I have no evil intent. It is only that when the Great-August-Deity [our father] spoke, deigning to enquire the cause of my wailing and weeping, I said 'I wail because I wish to go to my deceased mother's land,'—whereupon the Great-August-Deity said: 'Thou shalt not dwell in this land,' and deigned to expel me with a divine expulsion. It is therefore solely with the thought of taking leave of thee and departing, that I have ascended hither. I have no strange intentions." Then the Heaven-Shining-

³²² The English locution "to take leave" exactly represents the Chinese character here used which, from having the sense of "asking permission," has come to mean "bidding adieu."

³²³ He was her younger brother. But see what is said on the subject of names expressive of relationship on p. xxxvii of Introduction. The phonetic characters 那勢 are here used to represent 兄, "elder brother."

³²⁴ Literally "heart," here and elsewhere.

³²⁵ Or "hand."

³²⁶ The original is here obscure, but the translator has, as usual, followed the Chinese characters as far as possible, and has been chiefly guided by Moribe's interpretation. According to this, the "eight feet" (which Moribe takes to mean simply "several feet") must be supposed to refer to the length of the necklace which, he says, probably resembled a Buddhist rosary, only that the beads were somewhat larger. For a discussion of the various interpretations to which this phrase descriptive of the Sun-Goddess's ornaments may be subjected, see Note 4 to Mr. Satow's third paper on the "Rituals" in Vol. IX Pt. II, p. 198 of these "Transactions," and Moribe's "Examination of Difficult Words," Vol. II. pp. 4-5, s.v. Ya-saka-ni no iho-tsu no mi sumaru no tama. Mr. Satow, adopting some of the bolder etymologies of the Japanese commentators, translates thus: "the ever-bright curved (or glittering) jewels, the many assembled jewels," and concludes that "a long string of, perhaps, claw-shaped stone beads" was what the author meant to describe.

³²⁷ Hirata supposes this additional quiver to have been slung in front.

³²⁸ Motowori's long note on the expression taka-tomo, to be found in Vol. VII, pp. 39-40 of his "Commentary" seems to prove that "high-low-sounding elbow-pad" (竹 being written phonetically for 高) is the most likely meaning,—these pads, of which one was worn on the left elbow, having been made of skin. Arawi Hakuseki however takes 竹 in its p. 56 literal sense of "bamboo" and Moribe suggests the (健) which occurs so often in proper names with the signification of "bold," "brave," or "stout."

³²⁹ The reading yu-hara, here rendered "top [of the bow]" is doubtful, and yu-hadsu, "bow-notch," has been proposed as an emendation.

³³⁰ I.e., "both legs penetrated into the ground up to the thigh," a proof of the vigour with which she used her limbs in stamping.

³³¹ Lit. "bubble-snow."

Great-August-Deity said: "If that be so, whereby shall I know the sincerity of thine intentions?" Thereupon His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness replied, saying: "Let each of us swear, ³³² and produce children." So as they then swore to each other from the opposite banks of the Tranquil River of Heaven. ³³³ the august names of the Deities that were born from the mist [of her breath] when, having first begged His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness to hand her the ten-grasp sabre which was girded on him and broken it into three fragments, and with the jewels making a jingling sound ³³⁴ having brandished and washed them in the True-Pool-Well of Heaven, ³³⁵ and having crunchingly crunched them, the Heaven-Shining-Great-Deity blew them away, were Her Augustness Torrent-Mist-Princess, ³³⁶ another august name for whom is Her Augustness Princess-of-the-Island-of-the Offing; next Her Augustness Lovely-Island-Princess, ³³⁷ another august name for whom is Her Augustness Good-Princess; next Her Augustness, Princess-of-the-Torrent. ³³⁸ The august name of the Deity that was born from the mist [of his breath] when, having begged the Heaven-Shining. Great-August-Deity to hand him the augustly complete [string] of curved jewels eight feet [long],—of five hundred jewels,—that was twisted in the left august bunch [of her hair], and with the jewels making a jingling sound having brandished and washed them in the True-Pool. Well of Heaven, and having crunchingly crunched them, His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness blew them away, was His Augustness Truly-Conquer-I-Conqueror-Conquering-Swift-Heavenly-Great-Great-Ears. ³³⁹ The august name of the Deity that was ³³² i.e., "pledge our faith," "bind ourselves," in order to show forth the sincerity of our intentions.—Hirata has a long note on the word ukehi, here rendered "swear" (elsewhere as a Substantive, "oath,") which the student will do well to consult. It is contained in his "Exposition of the Ancient Histories," Vol. VII, pp. 61-63.

³³³ Ame-no-yasu-kaha (according to Motowori's reading Ame-no-yasu-no-kaha), our Milky Way. The "Chronicles of Old Matters of Former Ages" perhaps preserve the true etymology of the word by writing it Ama-no-ya-se-kaha, i.e., "the Heavenly River of eight currents (or reaches)." This would mean simply "a broad river." The text literally says: "having placed the Tranquil River of Heaven in the middle," etc.; but the sense of the clause is that given in the translation.

³³⁴ These words seem, as Motowori says. to have been erroneously brought in here from the next sentence, where they come in appropriately.

³³⁵ Ame-no-ma-na-wi. The interpretation adopted is that which has the authority of Motowori and Hirata. Perhaps only "Heavenly Well" is intended. The above authorities warn us that the word wi, "well," was not in ancient days restricted to its modern sense, but was used to designate any place at which water could be drawn, and Motowori thinks that Heaven contained several such. That mentioned in the text seems to have been a pool in the bed of the Tranquil River of Heaven.

³³⁶ This is the interpretation of the original name Ta-kiri-bime-no-mikoto which is proposed by Moribe. It is less far-fetched, and agrees better with the name of the sister deity Princess-of-the-Torrent, than do the other explanations that have been attempted. The alternative name is Oki-tsu-shima-no-mikoto.

³³⁷ Ichiki-shima-hime-no-mikoto, ichiki being an unusual form of itsuki. The island, which is in the Inland Sea, is still celebrated, but bears in common parlance the name of Miya-shima, i.e., "Temple Island." p. 57 The alternative name is Sa-yori-bime-no-mikoto, in which sa is an Ornamental Prefix not calling for translation.

³³⁸ Tagi-tsu-hime-no-mikoto.

³³⁹ Masa-ka-a-katsu-kachi-hayabi-ame-no-oshi-ho-mimi-no-mikoto. The word mimi (耳 "ears") forms part of a large number of Ancient Japanese proper names. Motowori, who of course passes over in silence the fact that large ears are considered lucky, not only in Japan, but also in China and Korea, suggests the etymology hi hi or bi bi (𪛗𪛗), i.e., the word "wondrous" or "miraculous" repeated. But there are examples of such names in which the interpretation of mimi as "ears" is unavoidable. Thus Prince Umayado (commonly called Shō-to-ku Tai-shi) had also the name of Yatsu-mimi no Tai-shi 八耳太子 bestowed upon him on account of his extraordinary intelligence. Is it not therefore simpler in all cases to allow to the word this its natural meaning? The proper names in mi do however undoubtedly offer some difficulty, and Motowori scarcely seems content with his own derivation of the troublesome syllable. Oshi, as in other cases, is taken to represent ohoshi, "great"; and after much hesitation the translator has followed Motowori in regarding ho likewise as an abbreviated form of that word.

born from the mist [of his breath] when again, having begged her to hand him the jewels that were twisted in the right august bunch [of her hair], and having crunchingly crunched them, he blew them away, was His Augustness Ame-no-hohi. ³⁴⁰ The august name of the Deity that was born from the mist [of his breath] when again, having begged her to hand him the jewels that were twisted in her august head-dress, and having crunchingly crunched them, he blew them away, was His Augustness Prince-Lord-of-Heaven. ³⁴¹ The august name of the Deity that was born from the mist [of his breath] when again, having begged her to hand him the jewels that were twisted on her left august arm, ³⁴² and having crunchingly crunched them, he blew them away, was His Augustness Prince-Lord-of-Life. ³⁴³ The august name of the Deity that was born from the mist [of his breath] when again, having begged her to hand him the jewels that were twisted on her right august arm, ³⁴⁴ and having crunchingly crunched them, he blew them away, was His-Wondrous-Augustness-of-Kumanu. (Five Deities in all).

³⁴⁰ Ame-no signifies "of Heaven" or "heavenly." The syllables hohi are incomprehensible.

³⁴¹ Amatsu-hiko-ne-no-mikoto.

³⁴² Or "hand."

³⁴³ Iku-tsu-hiko-ne-no-mikoto.

SECTION XIV.—THE AUGUST DECLARATION OF THE DIVISION OF THE AUGUST MALE CHILDREN AND THE AUGUST FEMALE CHILDREN

Hereupon the Heavenly Shining-Great-August-Deity said to His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness: "As for the seed ³⁴⁵ of the five male Deities born last, their birth was from things of mine; so undoubtedly they are my children. As for the seed of the three female Deities born first, their birth was from a thing of thine; so doubtless they are thy children." Thus did she declare the division. So Her Augustness Torrent-Mist-Princess, the Deity born first, dwells in the Inner temple of Munakata. ³⁴⁶ The next, Her Augustness Lovely-Island-Princess, dwells in the middle temple of Munakata. The next, Her Augustness Princess-of-the-Torrent, dwells in the outer temple ³⁴⁷ of Munakata. These three Deities are the three Great Deities ³⁴⁸ held in reverence by the Dukes of Munakata. ³⁴⁹ So His Augustness Brave-Rustic-Illuminator, child of His Augustness Ame-no-hohi, one of the five children born afterwards (³⁵⁰ this is the ancestor of the Rulers of the Land of Idzumo, ³⁵¹ of the Rulers of the Land of Musashi, ³⁵² of the Rulers of the Upper Land of Unakami, ³⁵³ of the Rulers of the Lower Land of Unakami, ³⁵⁴ of the Rulers of the Land of Izhimu, ³⁵⁵ of the Departmental Suzerains of the Island of ³⁴⁵ I.e., the origin.

³⁴⁶ A place in the province of Chikuzen. The name signifies either "breast-shape" or "body-shape."

³⁴⁷ Or "sea-shore temple."

³⁴⁸ Or "the Great Deities of the three shrines."

³⁴⁹ Munakata-no-kimi. Remember that all the names in this and similar lists are hereditary "gentile names" (see Introduction, p. xvi), and that "Duke" and the other titles used in this translation to designate them must only be regarded as approximations towards giving the force of the Japanese originals, which are themselves by no means always clear, either etymologically or historically. Indeed Motowori in a chapter entitled "Kuni no Miyatsuko" (國造) in his "Tama-Katsuma," Vol. VI, p. 25, remarks that the distinctions obtaining between the various titles of Kimi, Wake, Murazhi, etc., are no longer to be ascertained, if indeed they were ever sharply drawn, and that Kuni no Miyatsuko (here rendered "Rulers of the Land") seems to have been a general term including all the rest, and roughly corresponding to the modern title of Daimyo.—It must be well understood that all these names, though properly and originally denoting an office, were inherited as titles, and ended (after the custom of conferring new ones had died out) by being little more than an extra surname appended to the surname proper (uji). This kind of quasi-official quasi-titular surname is what is called by the Japanese a kabane, which the translator, for want of a better equivalent, renders, by "gentile name." Motowori's learned note in Vol. XXXIX, pp. 14-15 of his Commentary, should be consulted for a full exposition of this somewhat intricate subject, on which there has been much misapprehension, chiefly owing to the want of a fitting Chinese character to denote the word kabane.

³⁵⁰ Here and throughout the work passages of this nature containing genealogies are in all the editions printed small, and might therefore be supposed to be either intended as foot-notes, or to be later glosses. Motowori however rightly rejects such an inference. To an English reader the word "this" may seem, by disturbing the grammar of the sentence, to support that inference; but in Japanese construction little importance need be attached to the presence of this double Nominative.—The name in the original of the ancestral deity whose children are here enumerated is Taka-Hira-Tori-no-mikoto, and the interpretation thereof in the sense given in the translation is Motowori's Hira-tori being supposed by him to stand for Hina-teri.

³⁵² Musashi-no-kuni-no-miyatsuko. In classical and modern usage Musashi does not take the nigori.

³⁵³ Kami-tsu-Unakami-no-kuni-no-miyatsuko. Unakami was a part of what forms the modern province of Kadzusa. The name probably signifies "on the sea."

³⁵⁴ Shimo-tsu-Unakami-no-kuni-no-miyatsuko.

³⁵⁵ Izhimu-no-kuni-miyatsuko. Izhimu (given in the "Japanese Words Classified and Explained" as Izhimi) was a portion of the modern province of Kadzusa. The etymology of the name is unknown.

Tsu ³⁵⁶ and of the Rulers of the Land of Tohotsu-Afumi ³⁵⁷). The next, His Augustness Prince-Lord-of-Heaven (is the Ancestor of the Rulers of the Land of Ofushi-kafuchi, ³⁵⁸ of the Chiefs of Nukatabe-no-yuwe, ³⁵⁹ of the Rulers of the Land of Ki, ³⁶⁰ of the Suzerains of Tanaka ³⁶¹ in Yamato, of the Rulers of the Land of Yamashiro, ³⁶² of the Rulers of the Land of Umaguta, ³⁶³ of the Rulers of the Land of Kine ³⁶⁴ in Michi-no-Shiri, ³⁶⁵ of the Rulers of the Land of Suhau, ³⁶⁶ of the Rulers of Amuchi, ³⁶⁷ in Yamato, of the Departmental Suzerains of Takechi, ³⁶⁸ of the Territorial Lords of Kamaфу, ³⁶⁹ and of the Rulers of Sakikusabe ³⁷⁰).

³⁵⁶ Tsushima-no-agata-no-atahe.

³⁵⁷ Toho-tsu-afumi-no-kuni-no-miyatsuko. In modern times Toho-tsu-afumi has been contracted to Tohotafumi and is pronounced Tōtōmi. The name signifies "distant fresh sea" (i.e. "distant lake") the province which bears it being thus designated in reference to a large lagoon which it contains, and in contradistinction to Chika-tsu-afumi, "near fresh sea," the name of the province in which lies Lake Biha. In modern times the latter has come to be known simply as Afumi (pronounced Omi), and the original connection of ideas between its name and that of Tōtōmi is lost sight of.

³⁵⁸ Ohoshi-kafuchi-no-kuni-no-miyatsuko. Ohoshi-kafuchi (in modern times pronounced Ochikochi) signifies "within the great rivers."

³⁵⁹ Nukatabe-no-yuwe-no-murazhi. The meaning of this name is not certain, but yuwe seems to be the word for "bathing woman" mentioned in Sect. LXXI (Note 11). See Motowori's remarks in Vol. XXIV, p. 56 of his "Commentary" and the story of the origin of the name given in the "Catalogue of Family Names," Vol. II, pp. 8-9, edit. of 1834).

³⁶⁰ Kino-kuni-no-miyatsuko. Ki signifies "tree," and the province doubtless received this name from its forests.

Motowori supposes the character 茨 to have been lost in this place, and reads Ubaraki (the modern Ibaraki), a portion of the province of Hitachi. See Vol. VII, pp. 75-76 of his "Commentary."

³⁶¹ Tanaka-no-atahe. The word tana-ka signifies "in the middle of rice-fields."

³⁶² Yamashiro-no-kuni-no-miyatsuko. Yama-shiro signifies "behind the mountains," though it is now, by a play upon words, written with characters signifying "mountain-castle."

³⁶³ Umaguta-no-kuni-no-miyatsuko, Umaguta is a portion of the modern province of Kadzusa. The etymology of the name is not known.

³⁶⁴ Kiuhe-no-kuni-no-miyatsuko. The etymology of the name and the position of the place are equally obscure.

³⁶⁵ The modern province of Echigo, or perhaps any not well defined district in the north of Main Island. (See Section LX, Note 20.)

³⁶⁶ Suhau-no-kuni-no-miyatsuko. The etymology of Suhau is not known; but the name sounds Chinese.

³⁶⁷ Amuchi-no-miyatsuko. The derivation of Amuchi is unknown.

³⁶⁸ Takechi-no-agata-nushi. Takechi means "high market" or "high town."

³⁶⁹ Kamaфу-no-inaki. Kamaфу was a portion of Afumi. Motowori's suggestion that the name may be derived from kama (gama), "a bullfrog," does not seem a happy one.

³⁷⁰ Sakikusabe-no-miyatsuko. Sakikusa-be means literally "lily clan," saki-kusa, the old name for the lily (or one species of lily) being literally "the luck-plant." The story of the origin of this cognomen is to be found in the "Catalogue of Family Names," Vol. II, p. 9.

SECTION XV.—THE AUGUST RAVAGES OF HIS IMPETUOUS-MALE-AUGUSTNESS

Then His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness said to the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity: "Owing to the sincerity of my intentions I have, in begetting children, gotten delicate females. judging from this, ³⁷¹ I have undoubtedly gained the victory! With these words, and impetuous with victory, he broke down the divisions of the ricefields ³⁷² laid out by the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity, filled up the ditches, and moreover strewed excrements ³⁷³ in the palace where she partook of the great food. ³⁷⁴ So, though he did thus, the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity upbraided him not, ³⁷⁵ but said: "What looks like excrements must be something that His Augustness mine elder brother has vomited through drunkenness. Again, as to his breaking down the divisions of the rice fields and filling up the ditches, it must be because he grudges the land [they occupy ³⁷⁶] that His Augustness mine elder brother acts thus." But notwithstanding these apologetic words, he still continued his evil acts, and was more and more [violent]. As the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity sat in her awful ³⁷⁷ weaving-hall ³⁷⁸ seeing to the weaving of, the august garments of the Deities, he broke a hole in the top ³⁷⁹ of the weaving-hall, and through it let fall a heavenly piebald horse which he had flayed with a backward flaying, ³⁸⁰ at whose sight the women weaving the heavenly garments were so much alarmed that impegerunt privatas partes adversis radiis et obierunt. ³⁸¹

³⁷¹ Literally "if one speak from this."

³⁷² The character used is 田, which in Chinese does not necessarily signify a rice-field. But in Japanese it seems to have been always limited to this narrower meaning, to which likewise the context here clearly points.

³⁷³ In the original written 屎麻理 which is partly ideographic and partly phonetic for kuso-mari. Motowori interprets it to signify "excrements and urine"; but the parallel passage of the "Chronicles" which he himself quotes goes to prove that mari had not the latter meaning, as does also another well-known passage in the "Tale of a Bamboo-Cutter."

³⁷⁴ 大嘗 read oh-nihe. The word nihe now denotes "a sacrifice," and oh-nihe no matsuri is the religious festival of the tasting of the first new rice of the season.

³⁷⁶ I.e., he thinks that none of the land should be wasted in ditches and embankments, but should all be devoted to the production of food.

³⁷⁷ The character used is 忌 "to shun," which in Japanese has approximately the meaning of "sacred." Thus a certain family of priests p. 63 was called by the name of Imibe, lit. "the shunning clan," on account of the uncleanness from which they were bound to abstain.

³⁷⁸ Written with characters signifying literally "garment-house," but the meaning, as understood by the native commentators is that given in the text.

³⁷⁹ 頂. This character is taken by the native commentators in the sense of 棟, mune, "ridge-pole."

³⁸⁰ I.e., it is supposed, beginning at the tail. That this was considered criminal may be seen by comparing Sect. XCVII. Note 3.

³⁸¹ In the parallel passage of the "Chronicles" it is the goddess who injures herself with her shuttle, but without dying of the effects of the accident.

SECTION XVI.—THE DOOR OF THE HEAVENLY ROCK-DWELLING

So thereupon the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity, terrified at the sight, closed [behind her] the door of the Heavenly Rock-Dwelling, ³⁸² made it fast, ³⁸³ and retired. Then the whole Plain of High Heaven was obscured and all the Central Land of Reed-Plains darkened. Owing to this, eternal ³⁸⁴ night prevailed. Hereupon the voices of the myriad ³⁸⁵ Deities were like unto the flies in the fifth moon as they swarmed, and a myriad portents of woe all arose. Therefore did the eight hundred myriad ³⁸⁶ Deities assemble in a divine assembly in the bed ³⁸⁷ of the Tranquil River of Heaven, and bid the Deity Thought-Includer, ³⁸⁸ child of the High-August-Producing-Wondrous-Deity think of a plan, assembling the long-singing birds of eternal night ³⁸⁹ and making them sing, taking the hard rocks of Heaven from the river-bed of the Tranquil River of Heaven, and taking the iron ³⁹⁰ from the Heavenly Metal-Mountains, ³⁹¹ calling in the smith Ama-tsuma-ra, ³⁹² charging Her Augustness I-shi-ko-ri-do-me ³⁹³ to make a mirror, and charging ³⁸² Motowori says that the word "rock" need not here be taken literally. But it is always (and the translator thinks rightly) so understood, and the compound considered to mean a cave in the rocks, which is also the expression found in the "Chronicles" (岩窟).

³⁸³ The word sasu, which is here used, implies that the goddess p. 66 made the door fast either by sticking something against it or by bolting it,—perhaps with one of the metal hooks of which mentioned is made in Sect. LXV (Note 7).

³⁸⁴ Toko-yo, here properly written 常夜, and a few lines lower down semi-phonetically 常世.

³⁸⁵ Motowori supposes "myriad" to be a copyist's error for "evil." This clause is a repetition of one in Sect. XII.

³⁸⁶ The parallel passage in the "Chronicles" has "eighty myriads."

³⁸⁷ The Japanese word kohara, translated "bed," is thus defined in Dr. Hepburn's Dictionary, 2nd Edit. s. v. Kawara: "That part of the stony bed of a river which is dry except in high water."

³⁸⁸ Omohi-kane-no-kami, "He included in his single mind the thoughts and contrivances of many," says Motowori.

³⁸⁹ I.e., as is generally believed, the barndoor fowl.

³⁹⁰ The text has the character 鐵, "iron," which Hirata. reads ma-gane, lit. "true metal," the common Japanese term being kuro-gane, lit. "black metal," Motowori prefers to read simply kane, "metal" in general, The main text of the parallel passage in the "Chronicles" omits to mention the metal of which the mirror was made; but "One account" has the character 金, "metal" in general, often in Chinese, but rarely if ever in old Japanese, with the specific sense of "gold." The "Chronicles of Old Matters" alone, which are of very doubtful authenticity, say that the mirror was made of copper. (Copper was not discovered in Japan till the eighth century of the Christian era, a few years before the discovery of gold). The best and most obvious course is to adhere to the character in the text, which is, as above stated, "iron."

³⁹¹ I.e., the mines. The original expression is Ame no kana-yama.

³⁹² Ama-tsu signifies "of Heaven," but the rest of this name is not to be explained. Motowori adopts from the "Chronicles" the reading, Ama-tsu-ma-ura, where the character used for ma signifies "true," and that for ura signifies "sea-shore." (It should be remarked that the forging of a spear by this personage is referred by the author of the "Chronicles," not to the "Divine Age" but to the reign of the Emperor Sui-zei.) Motowori also proposes to supplement after the name the words "to make a spear." Hirata identifies this god with Ama-no-ma-hito-tsu-no-mikoto, His Augustness Heavenly-One-Eye, who is however not mentioned. in the "Records." Obvius hujus nominis sensus foret "Coelestis Penis," sed nullius commentatoris auctoritate commendatur.

³⁹³ This name is written in the "Chronicles" with characters signifying Stone-Coagulating-Old-Woman, which however seem to be as merely phonetic as those in the present text (伊斯許理度賣). Motowori proposes the interpretation of "Again-Forging-Old-Woman" (鑄重老女, I-shikiri-tome) which is supported by a tradition preserved in the "Gleanings of the Ancient Story," where it is related that the mirror, not having given satisfaction at first, was forged a second time. There is a long note on the subjects of this name in Hirata's

His Augustness jewel-Ancestor ³⁹⁴ to make an augustly complete [string] of curved jewels eight feet [long],—of five hundred jewels, ³⁹⁵—and summoning His Augustness Heavenly-Beckoning-Ancestor-Lord ³⁹⁶ and His Augustness Great-Jewel, ³⁹⁷ and causing them to pull out with a complete pulling the shoulder [-blade] of a true ³⁹⁸ stag from the Heavenly Mount Kagu, ³⁹⁹ and take cherrybark ⁴⁰⁰ from the Heavenly Mount Kagu, and perform divination, ⁴⁰¹ and pulling up by pulling its roots a true clevera japonica ⁴⁰² with five hundred [branches] from the Heavenly Mount Kagu, and taking and putting upon its upper branches the augustly complete [string] of curved jewels eight feet [long],—of five hundred jewels,—and taking and tying to the middle branches ⁴⁰³ the mirror eight feet [long], ⁴⁰⁴ and taking and hanging upon its lower branches the white pacificatory offerings ⁴⁰⁵ and the blue pacificatory offerings, His Augustness Grand-jewel taking these divers things and holding them together with the grand august Offerings, ⁴⁰⁶ and His Augustness Heavenly-Beckoning-Ancestor-Lord prayerfully reciting grand

"Exposition of the Ancient Histories," Vol. IX, p. 56, where that author propounds the novel opinion that I-shi-ko-ri-do-me was not a goddess at all, but a god.

³⁹⁴ Tama-no-ya-no-mikoto. The "Chronicles" write this name with characters signifying "Jewel-House," but such a reading seems less good.

³⁹⁵ See Sect. XIII, Note 5

³⁹⁶ Ame-no-ko-ya-ne-no-mikoto, also reads Ame-no etc. and Ama tsu etc. The signification of the syllables ko-ya, rendered "beckoning ancestor" in accordance with Motowori's view connecting the name with the share taken by the god who bore it in the legend here narrated, is obscure. Mr. Satow thinks that Koya may be the name of a place (see these "Transactions" Vol. VII, Pt. IV. p. 400).

³⁹⁸ The word "true" (ma) here and below is not much more than an Honorific.

³⁹⁹ We might also, though less well, translate by "Mount Kagu in Heaven." This would suit the view of Motowori, who is naturally averse to the identification of this Mount Kagu with the well-known mountain of that name in Yamato (see Sect. VII, Note 12). But of course an European scholar cannot allow of such a distinction being drawn.

⁴⁰⁰ Or perhaps the bark of the common birch is intended. The word in the original is haha-ka.

⁴⁰¹ See Mr. Satow's already quoted note in Vol. VII, Pt. II, p. 425 et seq, and more especially pp. 430-432, of these "Transactions."

⁴⁰² In Japanese saka-ki. It is commonly planted in the precincts of Shintō temples.

⁴⁰³ We might also translate in the Singular "to a middle branch," in order to conform to the rigid distinction which our language draws between Singular and Plural.

⁴⁰⁴ A note to the edition of 1687 proposes to substitute the characters 八咫 for 八尺 and a note in the original tells us to read them not ya-ta, but ya-ata. Hereupon Motowori founds his derivation of ya-ta, from ya-atama, "eight heads," and supposes the mirror to have been, not eight feet in length, but octangular, while Moribe, who in the case of the jewels accepts the obvious interpretation "eight feet [long]," thinks that the mirror had "an eightfold flowery pattern" (yaha-na-gata) round its border. But both these etymologies are unsupported by the other cases in which the word ya-ta occurs, and are rendered specially untenable by the fact of the mirror and curved beads being spoken of together further on as the 八尺勾瓊鏡 (Sect. XXXIII, Note 20).

⁴⁰⁶ The original word is written with the same character as the te of nigi-te translated "offerings" above.

liturgies, ⁴⁰⁷ and the Heavenly Hand-Strength-Male-Deity ⁴⁰⁸ standing hidden beside the door, and Her Augustness Heavenly-Alarming Female ⁴⁰⁹ hanging [round her] the heavenly clubmoss of the Heavenly Mount Kagu as a sash, ⁴¹⁰ and making the heavenly spindle-tree her head-dress, ⁴¹¹ and binding the leaves of the bamboo-grass of the Heavenly Mount Kagu in a posy for her hands, and laying a soundingboard ⁴¹² before the door of the Heavenly Rock-Dwelling, and stamping till she made it resound and doing as if possessed by a Deity, ⁴¹³ and pulling out the nipples of her breasts, pushing down her skirt-string usque ad privates partes. ⁴¹⁴ Then the Plain of High Heaven shook, and the eight hundred myriad Deities laughed together. Hereupon the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity was amazed, and, slightly opening the door of the Heavenly Rock-Dwelling, spoke thus from the inside: "Methought that owing to my retirement the Plain of Heaven would be dark, and likewise the Central Land of Reed-Plains would all be dark: how then is it that the Heavenly-Alarming-Female makes merry, and that likewise the eight hundred myriad Deities all laugh?" Then the Heavenly-Alarming-Female spoke saying: "We rejoice and are glad because there is a Deity more illustrious than Thine Augustness." While she was thus speaking, His Augustness Heavenly-Beckoning-Ancestor-Lord and His Augustness Grand-jewel pushed forward the mirror and respectfully showed it to the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity, whereupon the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity, more and more astonished, gradually came forth from the door and gazed upon it, whereupon the Heavenly-Hand-Strength-Male-Deity, who was standing hidden, took her august hand and drew her out, and then His Augustness Grand-jewel drew the bottom-tied rope ⁴¹⁵ along at her august back, and ⁴⁰⁷ Or in the Singular "a grand liturgy," or "ritual."

⁴⁰⁸ Ame-no-ta-jikara-wo-no-kami.

⁴⁰⁹ Ame-no-uzume-no-mikoto. The translator has followed the best authorities in rendering the obscure syllable uzu by the word "alarming." Another interpretation quoted in Tanigaha Shisei's "Perpetual Commentary on the Chronicles of Japan" and adopted by Moribe in his "Idzu no Chi-waki," is that uzume means head-dress, and that the goddess took her name from the head-dress of spindle-tree leaves which she wore.

The character 鋼, with which the syllables in question (here written phonetically) are rendered ideographically in the "Chronicles," signifies "metal head-gear," "flowers of gold or silver."

⁴¹⁰ Tasuki, "a cord or sash passed over the shoulders, round the back of the neck, and attached to the wrists, to strengthen the hands for the support of weights, whence the name, which means 'hand-helper.' It was thus different both in form and use from the modern tasuki, a cord with its two ends joined which is worn behind the neck, under the arms and round the back, to keep the modern loose sleeves out of the way when household duties are being performed." (E. Satow).

⁴¹¹ I.e., making for herself a head-dress of spindle-tree leaves.

⁴¹² The original of these words, uke fusete, is written phonetically, and the exact meaning of uke, here rendered "sounding-board," is open to doubt. The parallel passage in the "Chronicles" has the character, 槽, which signifies a "trough," "manger" or "tub," and the commentators seem therefore right in supposing that the meaning intended to be conveyed in both histories is that of some kind of improvised wooden structure used for the purpose of amplifying sound.

⁴¹³ Neither the text nor Motowori's Commentary (which Hirata adopts word for word) is absolutely explicit, but the imitation and not the reality of divine possession appears to be here intended. In the parallel passage of the "Chronicles," on the other hand, we seem to be reading of genuine possession.

⁴¹⁴ The subject of the Verb is not clear in many of the clauses of this immensely long sentence, which does not properly hang together. Some clauses read as if the different deities who take a part in the action did so of their own free will; but the intention of the author must have been to let a Causative sense be understood throughout, as he begins by telling us that a plan was devised by the deity Thought-Includer, which plan must have influenced all the subsequent details.

⁴¹⁵ Shiri-kume-naha, i.e., rope made of straw drawn up by the roots, which stick out from the end of the rope. Straw-ropes thus manufactured are still used in certain ceremonies and are called shime-naha, a corruption of the Archaic term, Motowori's explanation shows that this is more likely to be the proper signification of the spoke, saying: "Thou must not go back further in than this!" So when the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity had come forth, both the Plain of High Heaven and the Central-Land-of-Reed-Plains of course again became light. ⁴¹⁶ word than "back-limiting-rope" (shiri-ho-kagiri-me-naha), which had been previously suggested by Mabuchi with reference to its supposed origin at the time of the event narrated in this legend.

⁴¹⁶ Motowori plausibly conjectures the character 得 in the concluding words of this passage to be a copyist's error for 復, and the translator has accordingly rendered it by the English word "again." As it stands, the clause 自得照明, though making sense, does not read like the composition of a Japanese.

SECTION XVII.—THE AUGUST EXPULSION OF HIS-IMPETUOUS-MALE-AUGUSTNESS

Thereupon the eight hundred myriad Deities took counsel together, and imposed on High-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness a fine of a thousand tables, ⁴¹⁷ and likewise cut his beard, and even caused the nails of his fingers and toes to be pulled out, and expelled him with a divine expulsion. Again he begged food of the Deity Princess-of-Great-Food. ⁴¹⁸ Then the Princess-of-Great-Food took out all sorts of dainty things from her nose, her mouth, and her fundament, and made them up into all sorts [of dishes], which she offered to him. But His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness watched her proceedings, considered that she was offering up to him filth, and at once killed the Deity Princess-of-Great-Food. So the things that were born in the body of the Deity who had been killed were [as follows]: in her head were born silkworms, in her two eyes were born rice-seeds, in her two ears was born millet, ⁴¹⁹ in her nose were born small beans, ⁴²⁰ in her private parts was born barley, ⁴²¹ in her fundament were born large beans. ⁴²² So His Augustness the Deity-Producing-Wondrous-Ancestor ⁴²³ caused them to be taken and used as seeds.

⁴¹⁷ I.e., "an immense fine." The student should consult Motowori's elaborate note on this passage in Vol. IX, pp. 1-5 of his Commentary. Tables of gifts are mentioned in Sect. XXXVII, Note 7 and Sect. XL, Note 13.

⁴¹⁸ Oho-ge-tsu-hime-no-kami. This personage (but without the title of "Deity") has already appeared in Section V, (Note 8) as the alternative personal name of the Island of Aha.

⁴¹⁹ Panicum Italicum.

⁴²⁰ Phaseolus Radiatus.

⁴²¹ Or less probably "wheat."

⁴²² Soja Glycine.

⁴²³ Kami-musu-bi-mi-oya-no-mikoto, the same deity as the one mentioned at the beginning of these "Records" under the shorter title of Kami-musu-hi-no-kami. (See Sect. I. Note 6.)

SECTION XVIII.—THE EIGHT-FORKED SERPENT

So, having been expelled, [His-Swift-impetuous-Male-Augustness] descended to a place [called] Tori-kami ⁴²⁴ at the head-waters of the River Hi ⁴²⁵ in the Land of Idzumo. At this time some chopsticks ⁴²⁶ came floating down the stream. So His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness, thinking that there must be people at the head-waters of the river, went up it in quest of them, when he came upon an old man and an old woman,—two of them,—who had a young girl between them, ⁴²⁷ and were weeping. Then he deigned to ask: "Who are ye?" So the old man replied, saying: "I ⁴²⁸ am an Earthly Deity, ⁴²⁹ child of the Deity Great-Mountain-Possessor. ⁴³⁰ I am called by the name of Foot-Stroking-Elder, ⁴³¹ my wife is called by the name of Hand-Stroking Elder, and my daughter is called by the name of Wondrous-Inada-Princess." ⁴³² Again he asked: What is the cause of your crying?" [The old man answered] saying: "I had originally eight young girls as daughters. But the eight-forked serpent of Koshi ⁴³³ has come every year and devoured [one], and it is now its time to come, wherefore we weep." Then he asked him: "What is its form like?" [The old man] answered, saying: "Its eyes are like akakagachi, ⁴³⁴ it has one body with eight heads and eight tails. Moreover on its body grows moss, and also chamaecyparis ⁴³⁵ and cryptomerias. Its length extends over eight valleys and eight hills, and if one look at its belly, it is all constantly bloody and inflamed." (What is called ⁴²⁴ Written with the characters 鳥髮, "bird's hairs," but these must surely be phonetic. In the "Chronicles" the same name is written 鳥上.

⁴²⁵ Or Hii, the chief river in Idzumo. The name is supposed by some to have been derived from the name of the god Hi-hayabi (see Section VIII, Note 6).

⁴²⁶ Or in the Singular, "a chopstick."

⁴²⁷ Literally "had placed a young girl between them," a similar construction to that in Section XIII, (Note 11).

⁴²⁸ The humble character 僕 "servant" is used by the old man for the First Personal Pronoun.

⁴²⁹ 國神. Being generally used antithetically to 足摩手摩, "Heavenly Deity," it seems better to translate the characters thus than by "Country "Deity" or "Deity of the Land." (See Section I, Note 11).

⁴³⁰ Oho-yama-tsu-mi-no-kami, first mentioned in Sect. VI, (Note 17).

⁴³¹ Ashi-nadzu-chi, the wife's being Te-nadzu-chi. "One account" in the "Chronicles" gives Ashi nadzu-te-nadzu (足摩手摩) as the name of the old father alone, while the mother is called Inada-no-miya-nushi Susa-no-yatsu-mimi. (Inada-no-miya-nushi signifies "Mistress of the Temple of Inada"; the signification of the second compound, which forms the name properly so called is not clear, but should probably be interpreted to mean "Impetuous-Eight-Ears," the word susa, "impetuous," containing an allusion to the name of her divine visitor, and "eight ears" being Honorific).

⁴³² Kushi-[I]nada-hime, Inada (i.e. ina-da, "rice-field") being the name of a place. Kushi signifies not only "wondrous" but "comb," and is indeed here written with the character for "comb" 櫛, so that there is a play on the word in connection with the incident of her transformation into a comb which is mentioned immediately below, though most authorities agree in considering 櫛 to be here used phonetically for 奇, which is the reading in the "Chronicles." Moribe, however, in his "Idzu no Chi-waki" suggests the etymology Kushi-itadaki-hime (櫛頂姫) i.e., "Princess [used as] a comb [for] the head."

⁴³³ Derivation quite obscure. Motowori quotes an absurd etymology given in the "Japanese Words Classified and Explained," which identifies the name of Koshi with the Past Tense of the Verb kuru, "to come"! There is a district (kohori) named Koshi in the modern province of Echigo; but Koshi was down to historical times a somewhat vague designation of all the north-western provinces,—Echizen, Kaga, Noto, Etchū, and Echigo. A tradition preserved in the "Chronicles" tells us that it was meant to denote the Island of Yezo (or rather, perhaps, the land of the Yezo, i.e. the Ainos). The expression in the first Song in Sect. XXIV, and other similar ones in the early literature show that it was not looked upon as a part of Japan proper.

⁴³⁴ See Note 13.

⁴³⁵ A coniferous tree, the Chamaecyparis obtusa, in Japanese hi-no-ki. The cryptomeria is Cryptomeria japonica.

here akakagachi is the modern hohodzuki.⁴³⁶) Then His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness said to the old man: "If this be thy daughter, wilt thou offer her to me?" He replied, saying: "With reverence,⁴³⁷ but I know not thine august name." Then he replied, saying: "I am elder brother⁴³⁸ to the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity. So I have now descended from Heaven."

Then the Deities Foot-Stroker-Elder and Hand-Stroking-Elder said: "If that be so, with reverence will we offer [her to thee]." So His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness, at once taking and changing the young girl into a multitudinous and close-toothed comb which he stuck into his august hair-bunch, said to the Deities Foot-Stroking-Elder and Hand-Stroking-Elder: "Do you distill some eight-fold refined liquor."⁴³⁹

Also make a fence round about, in that fence make eight gates, at each gate tie [together] eight platforms,⁴⁴⁰ on each platform put a liquor-vat, and into each vat pour the eight-fold refined liquor, and wait."

So as they waited after having thus prepared everything in accordance with his bidding, the eight-forked serpent came truly as [the old man] had said, and immediately dipped a head into each vat, and drank the liquor. Thereupon it was intoxicated with drinking, and all [the heads] lay down and slept. T hen His-Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness drew the ten-grasp sabre,⁴⁴¹ that was augustly girded on him, and cut the serpent in pieces, so that the River Hi flowed on changed into a river of blood.

So when he cut the middle tail, the edge of his august sword broke. Then, thinking it strange, he thrust into and split [the flesh] with the point of his august sword and looked, and there was a great sword [within].

So he took this great sword, and, thinking it a strange thing, he respectfully informed the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity.⁴⁴² This is the Herb-Quelling Great Sword.⁴⁴³

⁴³⁶ The winter-cherry, Physalis Alkekengi.

⁴³⁷ For the word "reverence" here and a few lines further on. conf. Sect. IX, Note 4.

⁴³⁸ He was her younger brother; but see Introduction, p. xxxvii.

⁴³⁹ In Japanese sake, and archaically ki, written with the character 酒 and generally translated "rice-beer," but by Dr. Rein "rice-brandy" (Reis-branntwein). The modern sake resembles the Chinese huang chiu (黃酒). If we translated it by "rice-beer," we should of course have to render by "to brew" the Verb kamu or kamosu (醸) here rendered "to distill." It should be mentioned that Professor Atkinson who, like Dr. Rein, has studied the subject specially, uses the word "brewing;" but apparently no English term exactly represents the process which the liquor undergoes in the course of preparation. A curious question is suggested by the fact that the old Japanese word for "distilling" or "brewing" liquor is homonymous with the Verb "to chew." But there is not, beyond this isolated verbal resemblance, any documentary evidence in favour of the Japanese ever having practised a method of making liquor which still obtains in some of the South Sea Islands.—"One account" of the Chronicles of Japan makes Susa-no-wo say "Take all the fruits, and distill liquor."

⁴⁴⁰ The author doubtless intended, as Motowori suggests, to speak only of eight platforms,—one at each gate,—and not of sixty-four. But what he actually says is as in the translation.

⁴⁴¹ See Section VIII, Note 1.

⁴⁴² The text is not quite clear, but the above gives the interpretation which the words most naturally lend themselves. Motowori, influenced by the parallel passage in the "Chronicles," which says explicitly that the sword itself was sent up to the Sun-Goddess, reads the passage thus: "thinking it a strange thing, he sent it up with a message to the Heaven-Shining-Great-August- Deity"; and Mr. Satow follows him in thus translating (see Note 4 to Ritual 8, Vol. IX, Pt. II, 198-200 of these "Transactions," where the whole of this legend is translated with one or two slight verbal differences from the version here given). In the opinion of the present writer, Hirata's arguments in favour of the view here taken are conclusive (see his "Sources of the Ancient Histories." Section LXXII, in the second part of Vol. III, pp. 66-67). That the sword afterwards appears at the temple of the Sun-Goddess in Ise (see end of Section LXXXII), by the high-priestess of which it is bestowed on the legendary hero Yamato-take, is not to the point in this connection, as it is not necessary that all the parts of a myth should be perfectly consistent.

⁴⁴³ Kusa-nagi no tachi. For the applicability of this name see Sect. LXXXIII.

SECTION XIX.—THE PALACE OF SUGA

So thereupon His Swift-Impetuous-Male-Augustness sought in the land of Idzumo for a place where he might build a palace. Then he arrived at a place [called] Suga, and said: "On coming to this place my august heart is pure," ⁴⁴⁴—and in that place he built a palace to dwell in. So that place is now called Suga. ⁴⁴⁵ When this Great Deity first built ⁴⁴⁶ the palace of Suga, clouds rose up thence. Then he made an august song. ⁴⁴⁷ That song said: ⁴⁴⁸

"Eight clouds arise. The eight-fold fence of Idzumo makes an eight-fold fence for the spouses to retire [within]. Oh! that eight-fold fence." ⁴⁴⁹

⁴⁴⁴ I.e., "I feel refreshed." The Japanese term used is suga-sugashi, whence the origin ascribed to the name of the place Suga. But more probably the name gave rise to this detail of the legend.

⁴⁴⁵ The real derivation of Suga is unknown, all the native commentators accepting the statement in the text, and Motowori supposing that up to the time of the Deity's arrival it had borne the name of Inada. We may perhaps conjecture some connection between Suga and Susa-no-wo ("Impetuous Male," see Motowori's Commentary, Vol. IX, p. 49), and it may be mentioned that the "Eight-Eared Deity of Suga" is also mentioned as the "Eight-Eared Deity of Susa."

⁴⁴⁶ Or "began to build."

⁴⁴⁷ "Ode" is another rendering of the Japanese term uta, which has been used by the present writer and by others. Uta being however connected with utafu, "to sing," it seems more consistent to translate it by the English word "song."

⁴⁴⁸ Or perhaps rather "in that song he said."

⁴⁴⁹ This difficult song has been rather differently rendered by Mr. Aston in the Second Appendix to his "Grammar of the Japanese Written Language" (2nd Edition), and again by Mr. Satow in the note to his translation of the Ritual already quoted. Mr. Aston (premising that he follows Motowori's interpretation) translates it thus:

"Many clouds arise:

The clouds which come forth (are) a manifold fence:

For the husband and wife to retire within

They have formed a manifold fence:

Oh! that manifold fence!"

Mr. Satow's translation is as follows:

"Many clouds arise.

The manifold fence of the forth-issuing clouds

Makes a manifold fence

For the spouses to be within.

Oh! that manifold fence."

p. 77 In any case the meaning simply is that the multitudinous clouds rose up like a fence or screen behind which the newly-married deities might retire from public gaze, and Moribe suggests that the repetitions are an after-addition made to bring up to the usual number of thirty-one syllables what were originally but the three lines—

Tachi-idzuru kumo mo

Tsuma-gome ni

Yo-he-gahi tsukuru yo!

I.e.—

"The uprising clouds even, to shut up the spouses, make an eight-fold fence."

(See his discussion on this song in the "Idzu no Kotowaki Vol. I, pp. 1-3.)—The present writer has already stated in the Introduction (see p. lx) his reasons for always rendering the native word for "eight" (ya) by "eight" instead of by "many" or "numerous," as is done by the two eminent scholars above quoted. With regard to the word Idzumo which they, in deference to the opinions of the native commentators, render by "clouds which come forth" or "forth-issuing clouds" (the Chinese characters 出雲 with which the word is written having that

Then he called the Deity Foot-Stroking-Elder and said: "Thee do I appoint Headman ⁴⁵⁰ of my palace;" and moreover bestowed on him the name of Master-of-the-Temple-of-Inada-Eight-Eared-Deity-of-Suga. ⁴⁵¹ signification), the present writer cannot persuade himself that such a corruption as idzumo for ide-kumo either retained at the time of the composition of the song, or should now be credited with, the signification which this its supposed etymology assigns to it. The etymology moreover is far from being established, and in this, as in many other cases, the Chinese characters used to write the name of the province of Idzumo, may well have rested on nothing more than a vague similarity of sound, and probably no European scholar would endorse the opinion of the native commentators, to whom the "Records" are a sacred book, that the province of Idzumo received its name from this very poem. On the other hand, we need have no difficulty in conceding that the Pillow-Word ya-kumo-tatsu, by which Idzumo is preceded in poetical compositions, did probably here originate.—This song is in the "Chronicles" only quoted in a note, for which reason some authorities dispute its antiquity. In the note in question, we find the reading -gome (the "Records" have -gomi), the Transitive form instead of the Intransitive. If this were adopted, the translation would have to run thus: "The eight-fold fence of Idzumo makes an eight-fold fence to shut up the spouse[s?] in;" and probably "spouse" should be understood in the Feminine to mean "wife."

⁴⁵⁰ Obito, written with the Chinese character 首, while the Japanese word is probably derived from oho-bito, "great man." When used, as it often is, as a "gentile name," the translator renders it by "Grandee."

⁴⁵¹ Inada-no-miya-nushi Suga-no ya-tsui-mimi-no-kami. It should be stated that Motowori, as usual, objects to the view that mimi signifies "ears" (its proper meaning) in this name. But he has no better explanation to offer, and the Chinese characters give us ya-tsu mimi, "eight ears." The author of the "Tokiha-gusa" ingeniously proposes to consider ya-tsu mimi as a corruption of yatsuko mi mi (奴御身) "servant august body," but this cannot be seriously entertained (Conf. Sect. XIII, Note 18).

SECTION XX.—THE AUGUST ANCESTORS OF THE DEITY-MASTER-OF-THE-GREAT LAND

Quare, quum incepit in thalamo [opus procreationis] cum Mirâ-Herâ-Inadâ, procreavit Deum nomine Eight-Island Ruler. ⁴⁵² And again, having wedded the Divine-Princess-of-Great-Majesty, ⁴⁵³ daughter of the Deity Great-Mountain-Possessor, he begot children: the Great-Harvest Deity ⁴⁵⁴ and the August-Spirit-of-Food. ⁴⁵⁵ The elder brother the Deity Eight-Island-Ruler wedded Princess-Falling-Like-the-Flowers-of-the-Trees, ⁴⁵⁶ daughter of the Deity Great-Mountain-Possessor, and begot a child: the Deity Fuha-no-moji-Ku-nu-su-nu. ⁴⁵⁷ This Deity wedded Princess Hikaha, ⁴⁵⁸ daughter of the Deity Okami, ⁴⁵⁹ and begot a child: Water-Spoilt-Blossom-of-Fuka-buchi. ⁴⁶⁰ This Deity [67] wedded the Deity Ame-no-tsudohé-chi-ne, ⁴⁶¹ and begot a child: the Deity Great-Water-Master. ⁴⁶² This Deity wedded the Deity Grand-Ears ⁴⁶³ daughter of the Deity Funu-dzu-nu, ⁴⁶⁴ and begot a child: the Deity Heavenly-Brandishing-Prince-Lord. ⁴⁶⁵ This Deity wedded the Young-Princess-of-the-Small-Country, ⁴⁶⁶ daughter of ⁴⁵² Ya-shima-zhi-nu-mi. Ya-shima means "eight islands." The syllables zhi-nu-mi are obscure, but the translator has little doubt "ruler" fairly represents their import. Motowori takes zhi to be an apocopated and nigori'ed form of shiru, "to rule," nu to be an apocopated form of nushi, "master," and mi to be an apocopated form of the Honorific termination mimi. Tanigaha Shisei considers zhimu to stand for shidzumuru, "to govern," which comes to the same thing so far as the sense is concerned.

⁴⁵³ Kamu-oho-ichi-hime. The rendering of Oho-ichi as "Great Majesty" rests on a plausible conjecture of Hirata's, who proposes to, identify ichi with idzu (稜威). Motowori thinks that Oho-ichi should be taken as the name of a place; but this seems less good.

⁴⁵⁴ Oho-toshi-no-kami, written 大年神, the obvious rendering of which would be "great year." But the Japanese term toshi is believed to have originally signified, not "year" in the abstract, but that which was produced each year, viz., the harvest (conf. toru, "to take").

⁴⁵⁵ Uka-no-mi-tama.

⁴⁵⁶ Ko-no-hana-chiru-hime, so called, says Motowori, because she probably died young, as a blossom that falls from the tree. We might however perhaps take the Verb chiru in a Causative sense, and consider the name to signify "the Princess-Who-Causes-the-Flowers-of-the-Trees-to-Fall." A sister of this goddess appears in the pretty legend narrated in Sect. XXXVII under the parallel name of the Princess-Blossoming-Brilliantly-Like-the-Flowers-of-the-Trees. See Note 3 to that Sect.

⁴⁵⁷ Fuha-no-moji-ku-nu-su-nu-no-kami. The import of this name is quite uncertain. Fuha however seems to be the name of a place.

⁴⁵⁸ "Hi-kaha-mime. Hi-kaha (lit. "sun-river") is supposed to stand for the name of a place in Musashi, which is however written "ice-river" (氷河 and not 日河), the old Japanese words for "ice" and "sun" being homonymous.

⁴⁵⁹ See Sect. VIII. (Note 9), where the name is given as Kura okami.

⁴⁶⁰ Fuka-buchi-no-midzu-yare-hana. If Fuka-buchi were ascertained to be not, as is supposed, the name of a place, we should have to render it "deep pool," and the whole would mean in English "Water-Spoilt-Blossom-of-the-Deep-Pool."

⁴⁶¹ Ame-no-tsudohé-chi-ne-no-kami. In this name nothing is clear but the first three syllables, which signify "heavenly." But if Mabuchi's conjecture as to the meaning of the rest were accepted, we should have to translate the whole by "Heavenly-Assembling-Town-Lady."

⁴⁶² This is the meaning plausibly assigned by Motowori to the original O-midzu-nu-no-kami.

⁴⁶³ Fute-mimi-no-kami, plausibly conjectured by Tominobu to stand for Futo-mimi, etc., which gives the sense here adopted.

⁴⁶⁴ Funu-dzu-nu-no-kami. Motowori believes Funu to be the name of a place, and interprets the name to signify "Master of Funu." But this seems highly uncertain.

⁴⁶⁵ Ame-no-fuyu-kinu-no-kami (Motowori's reading) or Ama-no, etc. (Hirata's reading). The translation of the name follows Hirata's explanation, which is based on Motowori's, and according to which the

the Great-Deity-of-the-Small-Country, ⁴⁶⁷ and begot a child: the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land, ⁴⁶⁸ another name for whom is the Deity Great-Name-Possessor, ⁴⁶⁹ and another name is the Deity-of-the-Reed-Plains, ⁴⁷⁰ and another name is the Deity of Eight-Thousand-Spears, ⁴⁷¹ and another name is the Deity-Spirit-of-the-Living-Land. ⁴⁷² In all there were five names. ⁴⁷³ characters 冬衣 ("winter garments") in this text, and 葦根 read Fuki-ne in the "Chronicles," are merely phonetic, while the meaning is derived from a comparison of the sounds given by each. Though himself believing in the soundness of Hirata's conclusion, the translator must admit that it is not indisputable.

⁴⁶⁶ Sasu-kuni-waka-hime, or Sashi-kuni, etc. The former reading, which Hirata's adopts, seems best. The meaning of sasu, here rendered "small," is open to doubt.

⁴⁶⁷ Sasu-kuni-oho-[no-]kami, or Sashi, etc. The syllable no in the Japanese reading seems to be a superfluous addition of the modern commentators.

⁴⁶⁸ Oho-kuni-nushi-ne-kami.

⁴⁶⁹ Oho-na-muji-no-kami, to which Tominobu proposes to give the sense of "Great Hole-Possessor," in connection with the story of the mouse-hole in which he took refuge from the fire lit by the Impetuous-Male-Deity (Susa-no-wo) for his destruction (see Sect. XXIII). But the interpretation followed in the translation is the most likely as well as the orthodox one, this Deity being entitled the possessor of a Great Name or of Great Names on account of his renown in Japanese mythic story.

⁴⁷⁰ Ashi-hara-shiko-wo-no-kami. The "reed-plains" are doubtless put by metonymy for Japan.

⁴⁷¹ Yachi-hoko-no-kami.

⁴⁷² Utsushi-kuni-tama-no-kami. The name must be understood to mean "Spirit of the Land of the Living," and to be antithetical to that of one of his fathers-in-law, the Impetuous Male-Deity (Susa-no-wo) who became the god of Hades.

⁴⁷³ Or "he had five names."

SECTION XXI.—THE WHITE HARE OF INABA

So this Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land had eighty Deities his brethren; but they all left the land to the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land. The reason for their leaving it was this: Each of these eighty Deities had in his heart the wish to marry the Princess of Yakami ⁴⁷⁴ in Inaba, ⁴⁷⁵ and they went together to Inaba, putting their bag on [the back of] the Deity Great-Name-Possessor, whom they took with them as an attendant. Hereupon, when they arrived at Cape Keta, ⁴⁷⁶ [they found] a naked hare lying down. Then the eighty Deities spoke to the hare, saying: "What thou shouldest do is to bathe in the sea-water here, and lie on the slope of a high mountain exposed to the blowing of the wind." So the hare followed the instructions of the eighty Deities, and lay down. Then, as the sea-water dried, the skin of its body all split with the blowing of the wind, so that it lay weeping with pain. But the Deity Great-Name-Possessor, who came last of all, saw the hare, and said: "Why liest thou weeping?" The hare replied, saying: "I was in the Island of Oki, ⁴⁷⁷ and wished to cross over to this land, but had no means of crossing over. For this reason I deceived the crocodiles ⁴⁷⁸ of the sea, saying: 'Let you and me compete, and compute the numbers of our [respective] tribes. So do you go and fetch every member of your tribe, and make them all lie in a row across from this island to Cape Keta. Then I will tread on them, and count them as I run across. Hereby shall we know whether it or my tribe is the larger.' Upon my speaking thus, they were deceived and lay down in a row, and I trod on them and counted them as I came across, and was just about to get on land, when I said: 'You have been deceived by me.' As soon as I had finished speaking, the crocodile who lay the last of all seized me and stripped off all my clothing. As I was weeping and lamenting for this reason, the eighty Deities who went by before [thee] commanded and exhorted me, saying: 'Bathe in the salt water, and lie down exposed to the wind.' So, on my doing as they had instructed me, my whole body was hurt." Thereupon the Deity Great-Name-Possessor instructed the hare, saying: "Go quickly now to the river-mouth, wash thy body with the fresh water, then take the pollen of the sedges [growing] at the river-mouth, spread it about, and roll about upon it, whereupon thy body will certainly be restored to its original state." ⁴⁷⁹ So [the hare] did as it was instructed, and its body became as it had been originally. This was the White Hare of Inaba. ⁴⁸⁰ It is now called the Hare Deity. So the hare said to the Deity Great-Name-Possessor: "These eighty Deities shall certainly not get the Princess of Yakami. Though thou bearest the bag, Thine Augustness shall obtain her."

⁴⁷⁴ Yakami-hime. The etymology is uncertain.

⁴⁷⁵ The name of a province not far from that of Idzumo. The word may possibly, as Motowori suggests, be derived from ina-ba, "rice-leaves."

⁴⁷⁶ Kita-no-saki. The etymology of the name seems uncertain. The meaning of the word keta is "the beams of a roof, the yards of a sail." But perhaps Keta and keta may be nothing more than homonyms of independent origin.

⁴⁷⁷ Not far from the coast of Idzumo and of Inaba.

⁴⁷⁸ See Translator's Introduction, p. xxxiii, Note 41.

⁴⁷⁹ Literally "to its original skin"; that is to say that its skin would again be covered with fur.

⁴⁸⁰ Motowori and Moribe agree in considering that the word "white" means "bare" in this place, and the latter in his Critique of the former's Commentary quotes examples which show that their view is probably correct.

SECTION XXII.—MOUNT TEMA

Thereupon the Princess of Yakami answered ⁴⁸¹ the eighty Deities, saying: "I will not listen to your words. I mean to marry the Deity Great-Name-Possessor." So the eighty Deities, being enraged, and wishing to slay the Deity Great-Name-Possessor, took counsel together, on arriving at the foot of Tema ⁴⁸² in the land of Hahaki, and said [to him]: "On this mountain there is a red boar. So when we drive it down, do thou wait and catch it. If thou do not wait and catch it, we will certainly slay thee." Having [thus] spoken, they took fire, and burnt a large stone like unto a boar, and rolled it down. Then, as [they] drove it down and [he] caught it, ⁴⁸³ he got stuck to and burnt by the stone, and died. Thereupon Her Augustness his august parent ⁴⁸⁴ cried and lamented, and went up to Heaven, and entreated His Divine-Producing-Wondrous-Augustness, ⁴⁸⁵ who at once sent Princess Cockle-Shell ⁴⁸⁶ and Prince Clam ⁴⁸⁷ to bring him to life. Then Princess Cockle-Shell trituated and scorched ⁴⁸⁸ [her shell], and Princess Clam carried water and smeared [him] as with mother's ⁴⁸⁹ milk, whereupon he became a beautiful young man, and wandered off. Hereupon the eighty Deities, seeing [this], again deceived him, taking him with them into the mountains, where they cut down a large tree, inserted a wedge in the tree, ⁴⁹⁰ and made him stand in the middle, whereupon they took away the wedge and tortured him to death. ⁴⁹¹ Then on Her Augustness his august parent again seeking him with cries, she perceived him, and at once cleaving the tree, took him out and brought him to life, and said to him: ⁴⁹² "If thou remain here, thou wilt at last be destroyed by the eighty Deities." Then she sent him swiftly off to the august place of the ⁴⁸¹ It must be understood that in the meantime they had arrived at her dwelling and begun to court her.

⁴⁸² Etymology unknown.

⁴⁸³ The text is here concise to obscurity, but yet there ought not to be much doubt as to the author's intention.

⁴⁸⁴ The text has the character 祖 signifying properly "grand-parent," but frequently used in Archaic Japanese writings in the sense of "mother." It is then read oya, which the English word "parent" exactly represents.

⁴⁸⁵ Kami-musu-bi-no-mikoto. See Sect. I, Note 6.

⁴⁸⁶ Kisa-gahi-hime. The kiga-gahi here mentioned is the modern aka-gahi, a cockle, the Arca inflata.

⁴⁸⁷ Umugi-hime. The umugi here mentioned is the modern hamagari, a clam of the family Mactridæ, the Cytherea Mereirix.

⁴⁸⁸ The character used is 集, "collected," "gathered together." But the combined authority of Mabuchi, Motowori and Hirata obliges us either to consider it a copyist's error for 焦, "scorched," or else to believe that in early time in Japan the two characters were used interchangeably.

⁴⁸⁹ Or "nurse's." The meaning is that a paste like milk was made of the trituated and calcined shell mixed with water. There is in this passage a play upon words which it is impossible to reproduce in English, the Japanese term for "tritulating," kisage (which the author has taken care to write phonetically) resembling the name of Princess Kisa-gahi (Cockle-Shell), while omo, "mother" or "nurse," similarly recalls that of Princess Umugi (Clam). Motowori traces the names of the shell-fish in question to this exploit of the two goddesses. We shall be justified in applying an inverse interpretation to the legend.

⁴⁹¹ The characters 拷殺也, here rendered "tortured him to death," are by the modern commentators read uchi-koroshiki, which simply means killed [him]."

⁴⁹² Literally "to her child."

Deity Great-House-Prince ⁴⁹³ in the land of Ki. ⁴⁹⁴ Then when the eighty Deities searched and pursued till they came up to him, and fixed their arrows [in their bows], he escaped by clipping under the fork of a tree, and disappeared.

⁴⁹³ Oha-ya-biko-no-kami. This Deity is identified with the Deity I-dakeru mentioned in the "Chronicle" as a son of Susa-no-wo (the "Impetuous-Male-Deity"), and as the introducer into the Island of Tsukushi in particular and into all the "Eight Great Islands" of Japan of the seeds of plants and trees. Motowori's note on this name in Vol. X, pp. 28-29, is worth consulting, though his idea of connecting the agricultural and arboricultural renown of the Deity bearing it with the name of the province of Ki is doubtless quite fanciful.

⁴⁹⁴ I.e., "the land of tree" (木國). Later the character 木 was replaced by 紀, which in Sinico-Japanese has the same sound ki, while a second one, 伊, was added in order to conform to an edict of the Empress Gem-miyō (A. D. 713) to the effect that all names of places were to be written with two Chinese characters, as was usual in China and Korea. The second character in this case simply carried on the i sound with which the first ends, so that the name became Kii.

SECTION XXIII.—THE NETHER-DISTANT-LAND

[The Deity Great-House-Prince spoke to him ⁴⁹⁵] saying: "Thou must set off to the Nether-Distant-Land where dwells His Impetuous-Mate-Augustness. That Great Deity will certainly counsel thee." So on his obeying her command and arriving at the august place ⁴⁹⁶ of His Impetuous-Male-Augustness, the latter's daughter the Forward-Princess ⁴⁹⁷ came out and saw him, and they exchanged glances and were married, and [she] went in again, and told her father, saying: "A very beautiful Deity has come." Then the Great Deity went out and looked, and said: "This is the Ugly-Male-Deity-of-the-Reed-Plain," ⁴⁹⁸ and at once calling him in, made him sleep in the snake-house. Hereupon his wife, Her Augustness the Forward-Princess, gave her husband a snake-scarf, ⁴⁹⁹ saying: "When the snakes are about to bite thee, drive them away by waving this scarf thrice." So, on his doing as she had instructed, the snakes became quiet, so that he came forth after calm slumbers. Again on the night of the next day [the Impetuous-Male-Deity] put him into the centipede and wasp-house; ⁵⁰⁰ but as she again gave him a centipede and wasp-scarf, and instructed him as before, he came forth calmly. Again [the Impetuous-Male-Deity] shot a whizzing barb ⁵⁰¹ into the middle of a large moor, and sent him to fetch the arrow and, when he had entered the moor, at once set fire to the moor all round. Thereupon, while he [stood] knowing no place of exit, a mouse ⁵⁰² came and said: "The inside is hollow-hollow; the outside is narrow-narrow." ⁵⁰³ Owing to its speaking thus, he trod on the place, where, upon he fell in and hid himself, during which time the fire burnt past. Then the mouse brought out in its mouth and presented to him the whizzing barb. The feathers of the arrow were brought in their mouths by all the mouse's children. Hereupon his wife the Forward-Princess came bearing mourning-implements, ⁵⁰⁴ and crying. Her father the Great Deity, thinking that [the Deity Great-Name-Possessor] was already dead and done for, went out and stood on the moor, whereupon [the Deity Great-Name-Possessor] brought the arrow and presented it to him, upon which [the Great Deity], taking him into the house and calling him into an ⁴⁹⁵ Literally, "to the child." The words placed in brackets, and which are not to be found in either of the early printed editions, are supplied in accordance with a suggestion of Moribe's contained in his Critique of Motowori's Commentary. Motowori himself had supplied the words "Her Augustness his august parent spoke to him," which seem less appropriate. It is true that one MS. is quoted by Motowori as favouring his view; but such authority is insufficient, and the mistake, moreover, peculiarly easy for a copyist to make (mi oya for oho-ya).

⁴⁹⁶ I.e., the Palace.

⁴⁹⁷ This is Motowori's view of the import of the original name Suseri-bime, which he connects with susumu, "to advance," "to press forward," and explains by reference to the bold, forward conduct of the young goddess.

⁴⁹⁸ One of the alternative names of this Deity, who is mostly mentioned by one of his other four designations, for a list of which see sect. XX. (Notes 17 to 21).

⁴⁹⁹ I.e., "a scarf by waving which he might keep off the snakes." Similarly the "centipede and wasp-scarf" mentioned a little farther on must be understood to mean "a scarf to ward off centipedes and wasps with."

⁵⁰⁰ The word hachi, translated "wasp," is a general name including other insects of the family of Vespidæ.

⁵⁰¹ I.e., "arrow." The original expression is nari-kabura (鳴鏑), which has survived in the modern language under the modified form of kabura-ya, defined in Dr. Hepburn's Dictionary as "an arrow with a head shaped like a turnip, having a hole in it, which causes it to hum as it flies." It was used in China in the time of the Han dynasty.

⁵⁰² Or "rat."

⁵⁰³ The translator cannot think of any better English equivalents for the child-like onomatopoeias hora-hora and subu-subu of the Japanese original.

⁵⁰⁴ The edition of 1687 reads the two characters 喪具 (here translated "mourning implements,") mo-gari no sonahe, i.e., "preparations for the funeral." Such preparations are detailed in the latter part of Sect. XXXI.

eight-foot spaced large room, ⁵⁰⁵ made him take the lice off his head. So, on looking at the head [he saw that] there were many centipedes [there]. Thereupon, as his wife gave to her husband berries of the muku tree ⁵⁰⁶ and red earth, he chewed the berries to pieces, and spat them out with the red earth which he held in his mouth, so that the Great Deity believed him to be chewing up and spitting out the centipedes, and, feeling fond [of him] in his heart, fell asleep. Then [the Deity Great-Name-Possessor], grasping the Great Deity's hair, tied it fast to the various rafters of the house, and, blocking up the floor of the house with a five hundred draught rock, ⁵⁰⁷ and taking his wife the Forward Princess on his back, then carried off the Great Deity's great life-sword ⁵⁰⁸ and life-bow-and-arrows, ⁵⁰⁹ as also his heavenly speaking-lute, ⁵¹⁰ and ran out. But the heavenly speaking-lute brushed against a tree, and the earth resounded. So the Great Deity, who was sleeping, started at the sound, and pulled down the house. But while he was disentangling his hair which was tied to the rafters, [the Deity Great-Name-Possessor] fled a long way. So then, pursuing after him to the Even Pass of Hades, ⁵¹¹ and gazing on him from afar, he called out to the Deity Great-Name-Possessor, saying: "With the great life-sword and the life-bow-and-arrows which thou earnest, pursue thy half-brethren ⁵¹² till they crouch on the august slopes of the passes, ⁵¹³ and pursue them till they are swept into the reaches of the rivers, and do thou, wretch! ⁵¹⁴ become the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land; ⁵¹⁵ and moreover, becoming the Deity Spirit-of-the-Living-Land, and making my daughter the Forward-Princess thy consort, ⁵¹⁶ do thou make stout the temple-pillars at the foot of Mount Uka ⁵¹⁷ in the nethermost rock-bottom, and make high the cross-beams to the Plain-of-High-Heaven, and dwell [there], thou ⁵⁰⁵ This is Mabuchi's interpretation, as quoted by Motowori, of the expression ya-ta-ma no oho-muro-ya. Motowori's own view is that ya-ta stands for ya-tzu, which give us in English "an eight-spaced large room." The character 間, "space" has been in later times used as a measure of length (six Japanese feet.) Altogether the precise meaning of the expression is not quite clear, but the general sense is a "large spacious room."

⁵⁰⁶ Aphananthe Aspera, also sometimes called Celtis Muku.

⁵⁰⁷ I.e., "a rock which it would require five hundred men to lift."

⁵⁰⁸ Iku-tachi (生大刀), supposed by Motowori to be "a sword having the virtue of conferring long life upon its possessor."

⁵⁰⁹ Iku-yumi-ya (生弓矢).

⁵¹⁰ Ame no nori-goto (天詔琴), so called because, as will be seen Sect. XCVI, divine messages were conveyed through a person playing p. 90 on the lute. Hirata, in his "Exposition of the Ancient Histories," invents the reading ame no nu-goto (天詔琴), "heavenly jewelled lute."

⁵¹¹ See Sect. IX. (Note 16).

⁵¹² They were not born of the same mother. The Chinese characters in the text (庶兄弟) imply, properly speaking, that the eighty brethren of the Great-Name-Possessor were the sons of concubines. But Motowori denies that such is the Japanese usage with regard to the characters in question.

⁵¹³ Or "hills."

⁵¹⁴ The word in the text is ore, an insulting equivalent Second Personal Pronoun. If we were translating into German, we might perhaps approximately represent its force by "er."

⁵¹⁵ Thus according to this legend, "Master-of-the-Great-Land" (Oho-kuni-nushi) was not the original name of the Deity commonly designated by it, and his sovereignty over the Land of the Living (whence the appropriateness of the second name in this context) was derived by investiture from the god of the Land of the Dead.

⁵¹⁶ The characters 嫡妻, which are here used, designate specifically the chief or legitimate wife, as opposed to the lesser wives or concubines.

⁵¹⁷ Uka-no-yama. No satisfactory etymology of Uka is forthcoming.

villain!" ⁵¹⁸ So when, bearing the great sword and bow, he pursued and scattered the eighty Deities, he did pursue them till they crouched on the august slope of every pass, ⁵¹⁹ he did pursue them till they were swept into every river, and then he began to make the land. ⁵²⁰ Quamobrem Hera Yamaki, secundum anterius pactum, [cum eo] in thalamo coivit. So he brought her with him; but, fearing his consort the Forward Princess, she stuck into the fork of a tree the child that she had borne, and went back. ⁵²¹ So the child was called by the name of the Tree-Fork-Deity, ⁵²² and another name was the Deity-of-August-Wells. ⁵²³

⁵¹⁸ I.e., "Firmly planting in the rock the pillars forming the foundation of thy palace, and rearing its fabric to the skies, do thou rule therefrom the Land of the Living, thou powerful wretch, who hast so successfully braved me!"

⁵¹⁹ Or "hill."

⁵²⁰ This is taken to mean that he continued the act of creation which had been interrupted by the death of Izanami (the "Female-Who-Invites"). See Sect. IX, p. 35, where her husband Izanagi says to her: "The lands that I and thou made are not yet finished making." The words "Kuni tsukuri" (國作), here used for "making the land," became a title for "Ruler-of-the-Land" and finally a "gentile name" (kabane).

⁵²¹ Q.d., to Inaba.

⁵²² Ki-no-mata-no-kami.

⁵²³ Mi-wi-no-kami. He is supposed to have benefitted the country by digging wells in many places.

SECTION XXIV.—THE WOOING OF THE DEITY-OF-EIGHT-THOUSAND-SPEARS

This Deity-of-Eight-Thousand-Spears, ⁵²⁴ when he went forth ⁵²⁵ to woo the Princess of Nuna-kaha, ⁵²⁶ in the land of Koshi, on arriving at the house of the Princess of Nuna kaha sang, saying:

"[I] His Augustness the Deity-of-Eight-Thousand-Spears, having been unable to find a spouse in the Land of the Eight islands, and having heard that in the far off Land of Koshi there is a wise maiden, having heard that there is a beauteous maiden, I am standing [here] to truly woo her, I am going backwards and forwards to woo her. Without having yet untied even the cord of my sword, without having yet untied even my veil, I push back the plank-door shut by the maiden; while I am standing [here], I pull it forward. While I am standing [here], the nuye sings upon the green mountain, and [the voice of] the true bird of the moor, the pheasant, resounds; the bird of the yard, the cock, crows. Oh! the pity that [the] birds should sing! Oh! these birds! Would that I could beat them till they were sick! Oh! swiftly-flying heaven-racing messenger, the tradition of the thing, too, this!" ⁵²⁷ ⁵²⁴ In this Section, the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land is spoken of under this alias. See Sect. XX, Note 20).

⁵²⁵ The characters 幸行 here, in accordance with the reading of the commentators, rendered by the words "went forth," as Honorific, being only properly applied to the progresses of a sovereign.

⁵²⁶ Kuna-kawa-hime. Nana-kaha or Nu-na-kaha ("lagoon-river"), is supposed to be the name of a place in the province of Echigo.

⁵²⁷ The drift of this poem needs but little elucidation:—After giving his reasons for coming to woo the Princess of Nuna-kaha, the god declares that he is in such haste to penetrate to her chamber, that he does not even stay to ungird his sword or take off his veil, but tries to push or pull open the door at once. During these vain endeavours, the mountain side begins to re-echo with the cries of the birds announcing the dawn, when lovers must slink away. Would that he could kill these unwelcome harbingers of day, and bring back the darkness!—The Land of the Eight Islands (i.e. Japan proper, beyond whose boundaries lay the barbarous northern country of Koshi) is in the original Ya-shima-huni (Conf. Sect. V, Note 27).—The nuye is a bird which must be fabulous if most of the accounts given of it are accepted. The "Commentary on the Lyric Dramas" tells us (with variations) that "it has the head of a monkey, the body of a racoon-faced dog, the tail of a serpent, and the hands (sic) and feet of a tiger," adding, as the reader will make no difficulty in allowing, that "it is a strange and peculiar creature." The Wa-Kun Shiwori says that "it is a bird much larger than a pigeon, and having a loud and mournful cry." It is likewise said to come out at night-time and retire during the day, for which reason doubtless Mabuchi likens it to the owl. A very ancient and curious Chinese book entitled the "Mountain and Sea Classic" (山海經) the modern editions of which contain extremely droll illustrations of fabulous creatures, tells us of a bird called the "white nuye" (白鶴) which is "like a pheasant, with markings on its head, white wings, and yellow feet, and whose flesh is a certain cure for the hiccough." The character 發 and 𪗇, with which, as well as with 𪗇 the word nuye is variously written, seem to be unauthorized—The line here (following Motowori and Moribe's view) rendered "Would that I could beat them till they were sick!" will also bear the interpretation formerly proposed by Keichiyu, "Would that I could beat them till they left off!"—The last five lines, here rendered "Oh! swiftly flying heaven-racing messenger," etc., are extremely obscure. It is possible that ishi tafu ya (rendered "Oh! swiftly flying," in deference to Motowori's and Moribe's view) may be but a meaningless refrain. "Heaven racing messenger" is tolerably certain. Of the rest it is not easy to make sense. Motowori proposes to credit the five lines in question with the following general meaning: "May this song, like a messenger, "run down to future ages, preserving for them the tradition of this event!" Moribe, in his Critique of Motowori's Commentary, supposes the lines in question to be an addition made by the official singers, who in later p. 94 times sang these songs as an accompaniment to dances. Whatever their origin and

Then the Princess of Nuna-kaha, without yet opening the door, sang from the inside saying:—

"Thine Augustness the Deity-Of-Eight-Thousand-Spears! Being a maiden like a drooping plant, my heart is just a bird on a sand-bank by the shore; it will now indeed be a dotterel. Afterwards it will be a gentle bird; so as for thy life, do not deign to die. Oh! swiftly-flying heaven-racing messenger! the tradition of the thing, too, this!" ⁵²⁸

[Second Song of the Princess. ⁵²⁹]

When the sun shall hide behind the green mountains, in the night [black as] the true jewels of the moor will I come forth. Coming radiant with smiles like the morning sun, [thine] arms white as rope of paper-mulberry-bark shall softly pat [my] breast soft as the melting snow; and patting [each other] interlaced, stretching out and pillowing [ourselves] on [each other's] jewel-arms,— true jewel-arms,—and with outstretched legs, will we sleep. So speak not too lovingly, Thine Augustness the Deity-of-Eight-Thousand-Spears! The tradition of the thing, too, this!" ⁵³⁰ proper signification, it is plain that they had come to be used as a refrain, from which the first two lines were sometimes omitted, as we see in some of the songs further on.

⁵²⁸ The drift of the poem is this: "Being a tender maiden, my heart flutters like the birds on the sandy islets by the beach, and I cannot yet be thine. Yet do not die of despair; for I will soon comply with thy desires."—The word nuye-kusa (here rendered "drooping plant," in accordance with the views of the commentators) is a Pillow-Word of somewhat obscure derivation.—The word chidori (rendered "dotterel" throughout this translation) denotes in its modern acceptance, according to Messrs. Blakiston and Pryer, "any kind of sandpiper, plover or dotterel." Its proper and original signification is, however, greatly debated by the commentators, and some think that it is not the specific name of any kind of bird, but stands simply by apocope for tachi-dori, "rising bird," thus designating any kind of small bird that rises and flies along near the beach.—The word na-dori (here, in accordance with Moribe's view, rendered "gentle bird") is taken by Motowori to mean simply "gentle," "compliant." But both the construction and the context seem to impose on us the interpretation here given. Keichiyu, in his "Kōgan-Shō," interprets the whole passage differently; but in order to do so he, without sufficient authority, changes the readings of the text into wa tori, "my bird," and na tori "thy bird."—The refrain is the same as in the previous song.

⁵²⁹ There is no break in the text; but the commentators rightly consider the following to be a separate poem.

⁵³⁰ The import of this very plain-spoken poem needs no elucidation.—Nubatama (here rendered "true jewels of the moor") is the Pillow-Word for things black or related to darkness. The "true jewels of the moor" are supposed to be the jet-black berries of the hiafugi (pron. hiōgi, Ixia chinensis). The whole etymology is, however, not absolutely certain.—Of which of the two lovers the words "coming radiant" with "smiles" are spoken, is not clear; but they probably refer to the male deity, as do the white arms, strange though such an expression may appear as applied to a man. The goddess represents herself and her lover as using each other's arms for pillows. The word "jewel-arms" means simply "beautiful arms."

SECTION XXV.—THE CUP PLEDGE

Again this Deity's Chief Empress, ⁵³¹ Her Augustness the Forward-Princess, was very jealous. So the Deity her husband, being distressed, was about to go up from Idzumo to the Land of Yamato; and as he stood attired, with one august hand on the saddle of his august horse and one august foot in the august stirrup, he sang, saying:

"When I take and attire myself so carefully in my august garments black as the true jewels of the moor, and, like the birds of the offing, look at my breast,—though I raise my fins, [I say that] these are not good, and cast them off on the waves on the beach. When I take and attire myself so carefully in my august garments green as the kingfisher, and, like the birds of the oiling, look at my breast.—though I raise my fins, [I say that] these, too, are not good, and cast them off on the waves on the beach. When I take and attire myself so carefully in my raiment dyed in the sap of the dye-tree, the pounded madder sought in the mountain fields, and, like the birds of the offing, look at my breast,—though I raise my fins, [I say that] they are good. My dear young sister. Thine Augustness! Though thou say that thou wilt not weep,—if like the flocking birds, I flock and depart, if, like the led birds, I am led away and depart, thou wilt hang down thy head like a single eulalia upon the mountain and thy weeping shall indeed rise as the mist of the morning shower. Thine Augustness [my] spouse like the young herbs! The tradition of the thing, too, this!" ⁵³²

Then his Empress, taking a great august liquor-cup, and drawing near and offering it to him, sang, saying:—

"Oh! Thine Augustness the Deity-of-Eight-Thousand-Spears! [Thou], my [dear] Master-of-the-Great-Land indeed, being a man, probably hast on the various island-headlands that thou seest, and on every beach headland that thou lookest on, a wife like the young ⁵³¹ i.e., chief wife.

⁵³² The meaning of this poem is:—"I start for Yamato, there to search for a better wife, and I carefully array myself for the journey. Black,—the colour of mourning,—is not fair enough, and red is more beautiful than green; so it is on my red garments that my choice rests. And thou, jealous and imperious woman! for all that thou sayest that thou wilt not heed my going, thou wilt weep when I depart with my retainers as departs a flock of birds, and thou wilt bury thy head in thy hands, and thy tears shall be as the misty drops of the morning shower."—The words hata tagi (rendered in accordance with Motowori's view by "raise my fins") are supposed to signify "raise my sleeve." If the last syllable were found in any text written with a character not requiring the use of the nigori in the Japanese transcription, we should get the more satisfactory reading ha tatak, i.e. "beat my wings;" but the syllable in question does not seem to be anywhere so written;—The "madder" is in the original akane, here written (but doubtless only through the error of some copyist) atane. The words rendered "sought in the mountain fields" might also be translated "sown in the mountain fields," magashi, "sought," and makishi, "sowed" being thought to be convertible.—The words "my beloved" represent the Japanese itokoya no, whose meaning is obscure and much disputed.—The words "when I am led away" must be understood as if they were Active instead of Passive, signifying as they do "when I lead away my retinue of followers."—The eulalia (Eulalia Japonica) is a long kind of grass very often alluded to in the later classical poetry.—The words "on the mountain" represent the Japanese words yama-to no, in accordance with Motowori's and Hirata's view of the meaning of the latter (山處 or 山本). Th. primá facie interpretation of "in the province of Yamato," which Keichiyu adopts, will not bear investigation.—It is not quite clear whether "the mist of the morning shower" means mist separate from the rain, or is simply a phrase for the rain-drops themselves. Motowori adopts the former opinion.—"Young herbs:" waka-kusa, is the Pillow-Word for "spouse,"—newly married youths and maidens being likened to the fresh-grown grass. The refrain is an abbreviated form of that found in the two previous poems.

herbs. But as for me alas! being a woman, I have no man except thee; I have no spouse except thee. Beneath the fluttering of the ornamented fence, beneath the softness of the warm coverlet, beneath the rustling of the cloth coverlet, [thine] arms white as rope of paper-mulberry bark softly patting [my] breast soft as the melting snow, and patting [each other] interlaced, stretching out and pillowing [our selves] on [each others arms],—true jewel arms, and with outstretched legs, will we sleep. Lift up the luxuriant august liquor!" ⁵³³

She having thus sung, they at once pledged [each other] by the cup with [their hands] on [each other's] necks, ⁵³⁴ and are at rest till the present time. These are called divine words. ⁵³⁵

⁵³³ The import of this poem needs little explanation:—The goddess says to her husband, "Come back and live with me, and quaff this goblet as a sign of reconciliation; for though thou, as a man, mayest have a wife on every shore, I shall be left solitary if thou depart."—The "ornamented fence" is supposed to mean "a curtain round the sleeping place."—The latter part to the poem (excepting the concluding phrase) is a repetition of lines that have already occurred in the last one of Sect. XXIV (note 7). The word tate-matsurase (here rendered "lift up") occasions some difficulty. It properly signifies "present to a superior;" but here it must be taken to mean "partake of," as the goddess is speaking to her spouse himself, unless indeed we suppose the final words of the song to be a command addressed to one of her attendants to present the cup to their common lord and master.

⁵³⁴ This is the probable and generally accepted meaning of the original of this clause, which is written phonetically.

⁵³⁵ Explained by Moribe to mean, with reference to the whole story, "conversation about divine events."

Motowori proposes to supplement the character 歌, "song," to the two (神語) in the text, and to take the three together as designating the nature of the preceding songs, in accordance with the usage in other cases,—"Rustic Songs," "Courtier's Songs," etc. If this view were adopted, we should have to translate by "Divine Converse Songs."

SECTION XXVI.—THE DEITIES THE AUGUST DESCENDANTS OF THE DEITY MASTER-OF-THE-GREAT- LAND

So this Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land wedded Her Augustness Torrent-Mist-Princess, the Deity dwelling in the inner temple of Munakata.⁵³⁶ and begot children: the Deity Aji-shiki-taka-hiko-ne,⁵³⁷ next his younger sister Her Augustness High-Princess,⁵³⁸ another name for whom is Her Augustness Princess Under-Shining.⁵³⁹ This Deity Aji-shiki-taka-hiko-ne is he who is now called the Great August Deity of Kamo.⁵⁴⁰ Again the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land wedded Her Augustness Princess Divine-House-Shield⁵⁴¹ and begot a child: the Deity Thing-Sign-Master.⁵⁴² Again he wedded the Deity Bird-Ears,⁵⁴³ daughter of the Deity Eight-Island-Possessor,⁵⁴⁴ and begot a child: the Deity Bird-Growing-Ears.⁵⁴⁵ This Deity wedded Hina-teri-nakata-bichi-wo-ikochini,⁵⁴⁶ and begot a child: the Deity Land-Great-Wealth.⁵⁴⁷ This Deity wedded the Deity Ashi-

⁵³⁶ See Sect. XIII, Note 15 and Sect. XIV. Note 2.

⁵³⁷ Aji-shiki taka-hiko-ne no-kami. The meaning of the first two members of this compound name is altogether obscure. Taka-hiko-ne signifies "high-prince lord."

⁵³⁸ Taka-hime-no-mikoto. Taka-hime is supposed by Hirata to be a mutilated form of Taka-teru-hime, "High-Shining-Princess," which would make the two names of this personage properly complementary.

⁵³⁹ Shita-teru-hime-no-mikoto. This goddess is popularly supposed to have been extremely beautiful, whence perhaps the name, which might be taken to imply that her beauty shone forth from under her garments as in the case of So-towori-hime (see Sect. CXXXVII, Note 9).

⁵⁴⁰ Because there worshipped. The etymology of Kamo is not clear.

⁵⁴¹ Kamu-ya-tate-hime-no-mikoto. The translation here follows the Chinese characters. Another proposal of Motowori's is to regard the syllables ya-tate as a corruption of iya-taka-teri, "more and more high shining," which would give us for the whole name in English "Divine-More-and-More-High-Shining-Princess."

⁵⁴² I.e., "the Deity who gave a sign of the thing he did." The Japanese original is Koto-shire-nushi-no-kami. The translation of the name here given follows Motowori's interpretation, which takes it to contain an allusion to the act by which its bearer symbolized his surrender of the sovereignty of the land to the descendant of the Sun-Goddess. Lengthened forms of the name are Ya-he-koto-shiro-nushi-no-kami ("the Deity Eight-Fold-Thing-Sign-Master") and Tsumi-ba-ya-he-koto-shiro-nushi-no-kami, the first three syllables of which latter are obscure. Both of the lengthened forms are supposed to contain a reference to the manifold "green branches" mentioned in the legend referred to,—that. viz., which forms the subject-matter of Sect. XXXII.

⁵⁴³ Tori-mimi-no-kami. Motowori suggests that tori, "bird," may be but the name of a place in Yamato.

⁵⁴⁴ Ya-shima-muji-no-kami. "Possessor" is the probable meaning of muji, regarded here and elsewhere as an alternative form of mochi. Motowori suggests that Yashima may be meant for the name of a district in Yamato, in which case both this god and his daughter would have been named from the places of their birth or residence, which are near each other in the same province.

⁵⁴⁵ Tori-nara-mi-no-kami. The above interpretation, which is proposed by Motowori, seems more acceptable than "Bird-Sounding-Sea," which the Chinese characters yield. Tori "bird," if taken above to be the name of a place, must be likewise so considered here.—Motowori reasonably conjectures that a clause to the following effect is here omitted: "He wedded such and such a princess, daughter of such and such a Deity, and begot a child: the Deity Take-mina-gata" [i.e. probably Brave-August-Name-Firm] (See Sect. XXXII, Note 21). Hirata's text in his "Exposition of the Ancient Histories" is ⁵⁴⁶ The text is here evidently corrupt, and Motowori proposes to read either Hina-teri-nukata-bichi-wo-no-kami no musume Iko-chi-ni-no-kami which would give us in English "the Deity Ikochini, daughter of the male Deity Hina-teri-nukata-bichi," or else to take the whole as the father's name, and to suppose that the name of the daughter has been accidentally omitted. Hina-teri means "Rustic Illuminator," and the name resembles that of a deity mentioned in Sect. XIV, Note 6. Nukata and Bichi (or Hiji, reversing the position of the nigori) are supposed to be names of places. Ikochini is altogether obscure.

⁵⁴⁷ Kuni-oshi-tomi-no-kami, oshi, as in other instances, being considered a contraction of ohoshi, "great."

nadaka,⁵⁴⁸ another name for whom is Princess-Eight-Rivers-and-Inlets,⁵⁴⁹ and begot a child: the Deity Swift-Awful-Brave-Sahaya-Land-Ruler.⁵⁵⁰ This Deity wedded Princess Luck-Spirit,⁵⁵¹ daughter of the Deity Heavenly-Awful-Master,⁵⁵² and begot a child: the Deity Awful-Master-Prince.⁵⁵³ This Deity wedded Princess Hina-rashi,⁵⁵⁴ daughter of the Deity Okami,⁵⁵⁵ and begot a child: the Deity Tahiri-kishi-marumi.⁵⁵⁶ This Deity wedded the Deity Princess-Life-Spirit-Luck-Spirit,⁵⁵⁷ daughter of the Deity Waiting-to-See-the-Flowers-of-the-Holly,⁵⁵⁸ and begot a child: the Deity Mira-na-mi.⁵⁵⁹ This Deity wedded Princess Awo-numa-oshi,⁵⁶⁰ daughter of the Master-of-Shiki-yama,⁵⁶¹ and begot a child: the Deity Nunoshi-tomi-tori-naru-mi.⁵⁶² This Deity wedded the Young-Day-Female-Deity,⁵⁶³ and begot a child: the Deity Heavenly-Hibara-Great-Long-Wind-Wealth.⁵⁶⁴ This Deity wedded the Deity Toho-tsu-ma-chi-ne,⁵⁶⁵ daughter of the Deity Heavenly-Pass Boundary, and begot a child: the Deity Toho-tsu-yama-zaki-tarashi.⁵⁶⁶

⁵⁴⁸ Ashi-nakada-no-kami. It is not clear whether this is a personal name or, as Motowori supposes, the name of the place where the goddess resided. He quotes places named Ashidaka and Ashida; but this hardly seems satisfactory. In any case the name remains obscure.

⁵⁴⁹ Ya-kaha-ye-hime. The translation follows the meaning of the Chinese characters with which the name is written. It is, however, also open to us to consider Yaka-ha-ye as a corruption of iya-ko-haye, "more flourishing."

⁵⁵⁰ Haya-mika-no-take sahaya-ji-nu-mi-no-kami. The syllables sahaya are obscure, and Motowori's proposal to consider them as the name of a place has only been followed in the translation for want of something more satisfactory.

⁵⁵¹ Saki-tama-bime.

⁵⁵² Ame-no-mika-a-nushi-no-kami.

⁵⁵³ wika-nushi-hike-no-kami.

⁵⁵⁵ Okami-no-kami. See Sect. VIII, Note 9.

⁵⁵⁶ Tahiri-kishi-marumi-no-kami. The meaning of this name is quite obscure. Motowori throws out the suggestion that Tahiri may stand for Tari-hiri and Kishi-marumi for Kizhima-tsu-mi,—Tarihi and Kizhiwa being names of places, and tsu-mi, as usual, being credited with the signification of "possessor."

⁵⁵⁷ Iku-tama-saki-tama-hime.

⁵⁵⁸ Hihira-gi-no-sono-hana-madzu-mi-no-kami. The interpretation of the name here given is conjectural as far as the words "waiting to see" (taken on Tominobu's authority to be the most likely meaning of madzu-mi) p. 102 are concerned. Motowori suggests that hihira-gi-no may be but a sort of Pillow-Word, and not part of the actual name at all, and the remaining characters corrupted. Hihira-gi rendered "holly," is properly the Olea Aquifolia.

⁵⁵⁹ Miro-nami-no-kami. Meaning obscure. Miro is supposed by Motowori to be the name of a place, and na and mi to be Honorific appellations.

⁵⁶⁰ Awo-numa-nu-oshi-hime. Meaning obscure.

⁵⁶¹ Shiki-yama-nushi-no-kami. Shiki-yama is supposed to be the name of a place in Echizen.

⁵⁶² Nunoshi-tomi-tori-nara-mi-no-kami. Nunoshi is supposed to be the name of a place, and identical with Nunoshi, which forms part of the mother's name. Motowori takes tomi to be an Honorific, and Tori (as previously in the case of the deities Tori-mimi and Tori-naru-mi (See Notes 8 and 10) to be the name of another place. The translator would prefer to take both words in their common signification, and (leaving nunoshi aside as incomprehensible) to render the rest of the name thus: "Wealth-Bird-Growing-Ears."

⁵⁶³ Waka-hiru-me-na-kami.

⁵⁶⁴ Ame-no-hibara-oho-shi-na-domi-no-kami. Motowori supposes Hibara to be the name of a place, a view which the translator has adopted for want of a better.

⁵⁶⁵ Toho-tsu-ma-chi-ne-no-kami. Motowori supposes Tohotsu to be the name of a place, and the remaining syllables to be Honorific.

⁵⁶⁶ Toho-tsu-yama-zaki-tarashi-no-kami. Toho-tsu (lit. "distant") and yamazaki ("mountain-cape") are both considered by Motowori to be names of places. Tarashi signifies "perfect" or "perfection." We might perhaps render the name thus: "Perfection-of-the-Distant-Mountain- Cape."

From the above-mentioned Deity Eight-Island-Ruler down to the Deity Toho-tsu-yama-zaki-tarashi are called the Deities of seventeen generations.⁵⁶⁷

⁵⁶⁷ I.e. "seventeen generations of Deities." But the construction is curious. Motowori points out that there is here an error in the computation, as the text enumerates but fifteen generations. The names of the gods and goddess mentioned in this section offer unusual difficulties Motowori says that it is with hesitation that he proposes many of his interpretations, and it is with still greater hesitation that the translator has accepted them.

SECTION XXVII.—THE LITTLE-PRINCE-THE-RENOWNED-DEITY

So when the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land dwelt at the august cape of Miho ⁵⁶⁸ in Idzumo, there came riding on the crest ⁵⁶⁹ of the waves in a boat of heavenly Kagami ⁵⁷⁰ a Deity dressed in skins of geese ⁵⁷¹ flayed with a complete flaying, who, when asked his name, replied not; moreover the Deities who accompanied him, though asked, all said that they knew not. Then the toad ⁵⁷² spoke, saying: "As for this, the Crumbling Prince ⁵⁷³ will surely know it." Thereupon [the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land] summoned and asked the Crumbling-Prince, who replied, saying: "This is the Little-Prince-the-Renowned-Deity. ⁵⁷⁴ the august child of the Deity-Producing-Wondrous-Deity." ⁵⁷⁵ So on their then respectfully informing ⁵⁷⁶ His Augustness the Deity-Producing-Wondrous-August-Ancessor, he replied, saying: "This is truly my child. He among my children is the child who dipped between the fork of my hand. ⁵⁷⁷ So do he and thou become brethren, and make and consolidate this land." ⁵⁷⁸ So from that time forward the two Deities the Great-Name-Possessor and the Little-Prince-the-⁵⁶⁸ Not to be confounded with the better known Miho in Suruga. Derivation of the name seems uncertain.

⁵⁶⁹ The character used is 穂, which properly denotes an ear of rice or other grain.

⁵⁷⁰ What plant the author intends by this name is not quite certain. The characters 蘿摩 and 萊 are variously used to write it in the native work of reference, where also we learn that it probably corresponds to the plant known in different provinces of modern Japan as chichi-gusa, tombo-no-chichi, kagarahi and gaga-imo. We may best understand the Ampelopsis serianæfolia to have been intended, as the plant is described as having a berry three or four inches long shaped like a towel-gourd, (hechima), so that, if scooped out, it would fairly resemble a boat in miniature.

⁵⁷¹ All the authorities are agreed in considering the character 鵞, "goose," to be a copyist's error; but there is no agreement as to the character which should be substituted for it. Hirata reads 鶇, "wren," changing the phonetic. "Wren" also is the reading in "One account" of the "Chronicles," and Moribe, commenting thereon in his "Idzu no Chi-Waki," thinks that "wren" must have been the bird originally intended by the framers of the tradition. Motowori, following a suggestion of the editor of 1687, prefers to consider the radical for "bird" to have been put by mistake for the radical for "insect," and reads 蛾 which signifies "moth," especially the "silkworm moth." Motowori, however, proceeds to give to the character in question the Japanese reading of hi mushi (lit. "fire-insect," i.e. "ephemera"), which is not warranted. The proper Japanese reading is hihiru. The best would seem to be to adopt the reading 蛾 "moth."

⁵⁷² The original word is tani-guku. Its derivation and the name of the species which it denoted are alike unknown. Indeed we might equally well translate by "frog."

⁵⁷³ Kuye-biko. The interpretation of the name here adopted is Motowori's. Tominobu takes Kuye to be the name of a place, and the parsonage in question to have been the inventor of scarecrows, whence the tradition connected with his name.

⁵⁷⁴ Sukuna-biko-na-no-kami, or without the nigori, Sukuna-hiko-na-no-kami. The interpretation of the name here followed is that proposed by Motowori, but not followed by Hirata and Moribe, who prefer to consider it antithetical to that of Oho-na-muji, "the Great-name-Possessor."

⁵⁷⁵ First mentioned in Sect. I, Note 6. Immediately below, his name is given in the lengthened form.

⁵⁷⁶ Motowori (who, strange to say, is followed by Hirata,—conf. Sect. XVIII, Note 18) interprets the two characters 白上 (here in accordance with general usage taken to signify "respectfully informed") as "informed and took up," thus making it appear that the diminutive deity was personally taken up to Heaven. Surely a recollection of the parallel passage in the "Chronicles," which says that "a messenger was sent up to inform the Heavenly Deities," should have preserved the commentators from thus offending against both grammar and common sense.

⁵⁷⁷ I.e., "slipped away between my fingers." In the legend as given in the "Chronicles," the father explains more particularly that the Little-Prince-the-Renowned-Deity had been a bad boy who ran away.

⁵⁷⁸ For an explanation of this expression see Sect. XXIII. Note 26.

Renowned-Deity made and consolidated this land conjointly. But afterwards the Little-Prince-the-Renowned-Deity crossed over to the Eternal Land. ⁵⁷⁹ So [the Deity here] called the Crumbling Prince, who revealed the Little-Prince-the-Renowned-Deity, is what is now [called] the scarecrow in the mountain fields. This Deity, though his legs do not walk, is a Deity who knows everything in the Empire. ⁵⁸⁰

⁵⁷⁹ Toko-yo-no-kuai (常世國). Some kind of Paradise or Hades is meant, as is proved by innumerable references in the early literature of Japan: and we may suppose the idea to have been borrowed from the Chinese or through them from Buddhism, and to have been afterwards vaguely located in some distant country. In Sect. LXXIV we are told of the orange having been brought from the "Eternal Land" by Tajima-mori, who is said to have been of Korean extraction. Korea, which is to the west of Japan, and the Buddhist paradise in the west might well be confounded by tradition, though it is equally open to discussion whether Southern China or even the Loochoo Islands might not have been thus vaguely designated. In any case it was a distant place, imperfectly known, though specifically named. In the "Chronicles," Tajima-mori is made to say that it is "the retreat of Gods and Fairies, and not to be reached by common men."—Motowori's immense note on this word (see Vol. XXI, pp. 10-13 of his Commentary) is a specimen of the specious arguments by which he endeavours to ward off from the Early Japanese the imputation of ever having borrowed any ideas from their neighbours. He would have us believe that Toko-yo is derived from soko yori, "thence" (!) and that the name simply denotes foreign countries in general. This is on a par with the opinion emitted by Arawi Hakuseki in his "Ko-shi Tsū," to the effect that the "Eternal Land" was simply a place in the province of Hitachi. The latter good old commentator apparently founded himself on no better reasons than his general rejection of supernatural or otherwise perplexing details, and the fact that one of the characters with which the name of the province in question written is 常, which also forms part of the name of Toko-yo-no-kuni.

⁵⁸⁰ Literally "everything beneath Heaven." "Beneath Heaven" (天下), i.e. "all that is beneath the Heavens," is a common Chinese phrase for the Chinese Empire, which was in ancient days not unnaturally supposed by its inhabitants to form the whole civilized world. The expression was borrowed by the Japanese to designate their own country, But its use by them had not the same plea of ignorance of other civilized lands, as they were acquainted with China and Korea, and had hence obtained nearly all the arts of life.

SECTION XXVIII.—THE AUGUST-LUCK-SPIRIT-THE-AUGUST-WONDROUS-SPIRIT⁵⁸¹

Thereupon the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land lamented himself, and said: "How shall I alone be able to make this land? ⁵⁸² Together with what Deity can I make this land?" At this time there came a Deity illuminating the sea. This Deity said: "If thou wilt lay me to rest ⁵⁸³ well, I can make it together with thee. If not, the land cannot be made." Then the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land said: "If that be so, what is the manner of reverently laying thee to rest?" He replied, saying: "Reverently worship me on Yamato's green fence, the eastern mountain's top." ⁵⁸⁴ This is the Deity who dwells on the top of Mount Mimoro. ⁵⁸⁵

⁵⁸¹ In the "Chronicles," this is given as the designation of the Deity who came over the sea, and Motowori therefore adopts it as the heading of this Section.

⁵⁸² For an explanation of this expression see Sect. XXIII, Note 26.

⁵⁸³ I.e. "if thou wilt build me a temple." The original might also be rendered "if thou wilt worship before me," or "at my shrine," or "if thou wilt establish a temple to me."

⁵⁸⁴ I.e. on Mount Mimoro which stands as a protecting fence in the eastern part of the province of Yamato. Awo-kaki-yama, "green fence mountain," became a proper name used alternatively for Mount Mimoro (or, according to the later pronunciation, Mimuro). In like manner Himukashi-yama (in the later language Higashi-yama) "eastern mountain," has by some been considered to be a proper name.

⁵⁸⁵ I.e. "august house;" so called probably from the temple of the deity.

SECTION XXIX.—THE AUGUST CHILDREN OF THE GREAT-HARVEST-DEITY AND OF THE SWIFT-MOUNTAIN-DEITY

So the Great-Harvest-Deity wedded the Princess [of?] Inu, ⁵⁸⁶ daughter of the Divine-Life-Producing-Wondrous-Deity, ⁵⁸⁷ and begot children: the Deity August-Spirit-of-the-Great-Land; ⁵⁸⁸ next the Deity of Kara; ⁵⁸⁹ next the Deity Sohori; ⁵⁹⁰ next the Deity White-Sun; ⁵⁹¹ next the Sage-Deity. ⁵⁹² (Five Deities ⁵⁹³). Again he wedded the Refulgent-Princess, ⁵⁹⁴ and begot children: the Deity Great-Refulgent-Mountain-Dwelling-Grandee, ⁵⁹⁵ next the August-Harvest-Deity. ⁵⁹⁶ Again he wedded Princess Ame-shirukaru-midzu, ⁵⁹⁷ and begot children: the Deity Oki-tsu-hiko, ⁵⁹⁸ next Her Augustness Oki-tsu-hime, ⁵⁹⁹ another name for whom is the Deity Great Furnace-Princess ⁶⁰⁰—this is the Deity of the Furnace ⁶⁰¹ held in reverence by all people—next the Deity Great-

⁵⁸⁶ Inu-hime. Motowori supposes Inu to be the name of a place. The word properly signifies "dog."

⁵⁸⁷ Kamu-iku-musu-bi-no-kami.

⁵⁸⁸ Oho-kuni-mi-tama-no-kami.

⁵⁸⁹ Kara-no-kami, 韓神. Kara signifies Korea and China, and the Deity thus named appears in the "Chronicle" under the name of I-so-takeru ("Fifty-fold-Valiant"), of whom it is related that he was taken over to Korea by his father Susa-no-wo (the "Impetuous-Male").

⁵⁹⁰ Sohori-no-kami. The etymology is not clear. Hirata derives the name from a Verb soru, "to ride," "to go in a boat," in connection with the story (mentioned in the preceding note) of I-so-takeru having been taken over to Korea. According to this view, Sohori, like Kara-no-kami, would be an alternative name of I-so-takeru. But the derivation is hazardous, to say the least.

⁵⁹² Hizhiri-no-kami, written with the characters 聖神. The first of these is defined as signifying him who is intuitively wise and good, i.e. p. 109 the perfect sage. But perhaps we should in Archaic Japanese take the term hizhiri in what is its probable native etymological sense, viz. "sun-governing" (hizhiri, 日知), a title properly applied to the Japanese Emperors as descendants of the Sun-God, and of which the character 聖, which is used of the Chinese Monarchs, is only an equivalent in so far as it, too, is employed as an Honorific title.

⁵⁹³ Viz. from the August-Spirit-of-the-Great-Land to the Sage-Deity inclusive.

⁵⁹⁴ Kagaya-hime.

⁵⁹⁵ Oho-kaga-yama-to-omi-no-kami. The translation follows Hirata's interpretation, which nearly agrees with that proposed by Mabuchi.

⁵⁹⁶ Mi-toshi-no-kami. For the meaning of "harvest" attributed to the word toshi see Sect. XX, Note 3.

⁵⁹⁷ Ame-shiru-karu-midzu-hime. The name might tentatively be translated thus: Heaven-Governing-Fresh-Princess-of Karu. Motowori suggests that amerishiru may be but a sort of Pillow-Word for the rest of the name. Ama-tobu is, however, the only Pillow-word for Karu found in the poems. After all, Karu may not here be the name of a place at all.

⁵⁹⁸ Oki-tsu-hiko-no-kami. The translator ventures to think that the names of this deity and the next might simply be rendered (in accordance with the first character, 奥 entering into their composing) "Inner Prince" and "Inner Princess" or "Prince of the Interior" and "Princess of the Interior." Motowori however suggests that Okitsu may be the name of a place, while Hirata derives the names from oki-tsuchi, "laid earth," finding therein a reference to the furnace (made of clay) mentioned immediately below.

⁵⁹⁹ Oki-tsu-hime-no-mikoto.

⁶⁰⁰ Oho-be-hime-no-kami.

⁶⁰¹ Kama-no-kami (竈神). The "furnace" means the "kitchen." Neither Motowori nor Hirata informs us that the immense popularity of this Goddess, as well as her name, can clearly be traced to China.

Mountain-Integrator, ⁶⁰² another name for whom is the Deity-Great-Master-of-the-Mountain-End: ⁶⁰³ this Deity dwells on Mount Hiye ⁶⁰⁴ in the land of Chika-tsu-Afumi, ⁶⁰⁵ and is likewise the Deity dwelling at Matsu-no-wo ⁶⁰⁶ in Kadzunu, ⁶⁰⁷ who uses the whizzing barb. ⁶⁰⁸ Next the Deity-of-the-Fire-in-the-Yard; ⁶⁰⁹ next the Deity Asahi; ⁶¹⁰ next the Deity Hahigi; ⁶¹¹ next the Deity Refulgent-Mountain-Dwelling-Grandee; ⁶¹² next the Deity Swift-Mountain-Dwelling; ⁶¹³ next the High Deity-of-the-Fire-in-the-Yard; ⁶¹⁴ next the Great-Earth-Deity, ⁶¹⁵ another name for whom is the Deity August-Ancestor-of-Earth. ⁶¹⁶ (Nine Deities ⁶¹⁷)

⁶⁰² Oho-yama-kuni-no-kami. The meaning of kuhi, here (as in the case of Tsumu-guhi and Iku-guhi (see Sect. II, Note 4) rendered by the word "interior," is open to doubt.

⁶⁰³ Yama-suwe-no-oko-mushi-no-kami. Motowori supposes the word suwe, "end," to have the signification of "top."

⁶⁰⁴ As it stands, the etymology of this name is not clear. In later times the mountain was called Hiyei (比叡). But whether the, to outward appearance, native Hiye is but a corruption of this Chinese one, or whether it be true that the latter (on this hypothesis bestowed on account of its likeness in sound to the native designation) was not used till the end of the eighth or beginning of the ninth century. as is commonly stated, is difficult to decide.

⁶⁰⁵ I.e. "Close-Fresh-Sea." Afumi (modern pron. Omi, for aha-umi) alone signifies "fresh sea," i.e. "lake." This province contains the large lake commonly known as Lake Biha, (Biwa), but anciently simply called "the Fresh Sea," as being the lake par excellence of Japan. When one of the eastern provinces received, on account of a large lagoon or inlet which it contains, the name of Toho-tsu-Afumi (in modern pronunciation Tō-tōmi), i.e. "Distant-Fresh-Sea," the epithet Close was prefixed to the name of the province nearer to the ancient centre of government.

⁶⁰⁶ I.e. Pine-tree-Declivity.

⁶⁰⁷ I.e. Pueraria-Moor.

⁶⁰⁸ This passage (用鴨鏑神者也) must be corrupt. Mabuchi proposes to insert the character 祭 before 神, and to understand the author to have meant to tell us that the deity was worshipped with arrows, that is to say, that arrows were offered at his shrine. Motowori's proposal to consider 用 as an error for 成 or 化, and to interpret the clause thus: "the Deity who was changed into an arrow" is also worthy of notice. But a further suggestion of his to read 丹 for 用 and to interpret thus: "the Deity of the Red Arrow," seems best of all when taken in connection with the tradition, which he quotes from the "Topography of Yamashiro," to the effect that this god took the shape of a red arrow to gain access to his mistress Tama-yori-hime, such a transformation being one of the common-places of Japanese myth.

⁶⁰⁹ Niha-tsu-hi-no-kami. The interpretation of this name here adopted is not Motowori's, who takes hi in the sense of "wondrous," but Hirata's. The latter-author makes it clear that this deity (for whom Niha-taka-tsu-hi-no-kami, i.e. "The High-Deity-of-the-Fire-in-the-Yard," is but a slightly amplified designation) was none other than the above-mentioned Deity of the Kitchen, and his name an inclusive one for the pair of deities Oki-tsu-hiko and Oki-tsu-hime.

⁶¹⁰ Asuha-ho-kami. The signification of this name is obscure, and Motowori's proposal to derive it from ashi-niha, "foot-place," because the god in question may be supposed to protect the place on which people stand, is not altogether convincing. In fact he himself only advances it with hesitation. It should be added, however, that Hirata stamps it with his special approval, as he does also Motowori's derivation of the following name, Hahigi.

⁶¹¹ Hahi-gino-kami. Obscure, but ingeniously derived by Motowori from hachi-iri-gimi, i.e. "entering prince," the deity in question being supposed to have been the special protector of the entrances to houses, and to have thence received his name. Mr. Satow has translated it in the Rituals as "Entrance Limit."

⁶¹² Kaga-yama-to-omi-no-kami. The name is almost identical with that in Note 10.

⁶¹³ Ha-yama-to-no-kami. The interpretation of the name is that proposed by Motowori, and which seems tolerably satisfactory.

⁶¹⁴ Niha-taka-tsu-hi-no-kami. See note 24.

⁶¹⁵ Oho-tsuchi-no-kami.

⁶¹⁶ Tsuchi-no-mi-oya-kami.

In the above paragraph the children of the Great-Harvest-Deity, from the Deity August-Spirit-of-the Great-Land down to the Great-Earth-Deity, are altogether sixteen Deities.

The Deity Swift-Mountain-Dwelling ⁶¹⁸ wedded the Deity Princess-of-Great-Food, ⁶¹⁹ and begot children: the Deity Young-Mountain-Integrator; ⁶²⁰ next the Young-Harvest-Deity; ⁶²¹ next his younger sister the Young-Rice-Transplanting-Female-Deity; ⁶²² next the Water-Sprinkling-Deity; ⁶²³ next the Deity-of-the-High-Sun-of-Summer, ⁶²⁴ another name for whom is the Female-Deity-of-Summer; ⁶²⁵ next the Autumn-Princess; ⁶²⁶ next the Deity Stem-Harvest; ⁶²⁷ next the Deity Lord-Stem-Tree-Young-House-Rope. ⁶²⁸

In the above paragraph the children of the Deity Swift-Mountain-Dwelling, from the Deity Young-Mountain-Integrator down to the Deity Lord-Young-House-Rope, ⁶²⁹ are altogether eight Deities.

⁶¹⁷ This number is obtained if (as is perhaps permissible from a Japanese point of view) we consider Oki-tsu-hiko and Oki-tsu-hime as forming a single deity. Otherwise there are ten. A similar remark applies to the number sixteen mentioned immediately below.

⁶¹⁸ See Note 28.

⁶¹⁹ See Sect. V, Note 8. The fact that this goddess is related to have been previously killed (see Sect. XVII) causes Motowori some embarrassment.

⁶²⁰ Waka-yama-kuhi-no-kami.

⁶²¹ Waka-toshi-no-kami. Motowori proposes (considering this name in connection with the four that follow) to take waka-toshi in this place in the signification of the "the first sprouting" of the young rice. The five deities whose birth is here mentioned seem collectively to represent the natural succession of agricultural operations throughout the year.

⁶²² Waka-sa-name-no-kami.

⁶²³ Midzu-maki-no-kami.

⁶²⁴ Natsu-taka-tsu-hi-no-kami. Motowori's interpretation of hi as "wondrous" is perhaps as good as that here adopted, according to which it signifies "sun." His view would give us in English "the Summer-High-Wondrous-Deity."

⁶²⁵ Natsu-no-me-no-kami.

⁶²⁶ Aki-bime no-kami.

⁶²⁷ Kuku-toshi-no-kami. The word kuku, "stem," seems to allude to the length of the well-grown rice.

⁶²⁸ Kuku-ki-waka-muro-tsunane-no-kami. Motowori supposes this god to have been the protector of houses, and interprets the name to denote the beams, and the ropes with which the beams were bound together. The word here read tsuna, "rope;" is written with the character, and might perhaps be rendered "pueraria." But as in early times the tendrils of such creeping plants formed the only substitute for rope, the two renderings come to have very nearly the same signification.

⁶²⁹ The name is here abbreviated in the original to Waka-muro-tsuna-ne-no-kami.

SECTION XXX.—THE AUGUST DELIBERATION FOR PACIFYING THE LAND

The Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity commanded, saying: "The Luxuriant-Reed-Plains-the-Land-of-Fresh-Rice-ears-of-a-Thousand-Autumns,—Of Long-Five-Hundred-Autumns ⁶³⁰ is the land which my august child His Augustness Truly-Conqueror-I-Conquer-Conquering-Swift-Heavenly-Great-Great-Ears ⁶³¹ shall govern." Having [thus] deigned to charge him, she sent him down from Heaven. ⁶³² Hereupon His Augustness Heavenly-Great-Great-Ears, standing on the Floating Bridge of Heaven, ⁶³³ said: "The Luxuriant-Reed-Plains-the-Land-of-Fresh-Rice-ears-of-a-Thousand-Autumns,—of Long-Five-Hundred-Autumns is painfully uproarious,—it is." ⁶³⁴ With this announcement, he immediately re-ascended, and informed the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity. Then the High-August-Producing-Wondrous-Deity ⁶³⁵ and the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity commanded the eight hundred myriad Deities to assemble in a divine assembly in the bed of the Tranquil River of Heaven, ⁶³⁶ and caused the Deity Thought-Includer ⁶³⁷ to think [of a plan], and said: ⁶³⁸ "This Central Land of Reed-Plains is the land with which we have deigned to charge our august child as the land which he shall govern. So as he deems that violent and savage Earthly Deities ⁶³⁹ are numerous in this land, which Deity shall we send to subdue them?" Then the Deity Thought-Includer and likewise the eight hundred myriad Deities took counsel and said: "The Deity Ame-no-ho-hi ⁶⁴⁰ is the one that should be sent." So they sent the Deity Ame-no-ho-hi; but he at once curried favour with the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land, and for three years brought back no report.

⁶³⁰ Toyo-ashi-hara-no-chi-aki-no-naga-i-ho-aki-no-midzu-ho-izo-kuni, i.e., freely rendered, "ever fruitful Japan with its reed-covered plains and its luxuriant rice-fields."

⁶³¹ See Sect. XIII, Note 18. Henceforward this tremendous name is mostly abbreviated to Ame-no-oshi-ho-mimi (probably signifying "Heavenly-Great-Great-Ears.")

⁶³² So in the original. The sense, however, is rather "told him to descend from Heaven;" for he did not actually go further than the top of the "Floating Bridge," and never came down to earth.

⁶³³ See Sect. III, Note 3.

⁶³⁴ The words "it is" stand for ari keri in the original. Conf. Sect. X, Note 1.

⁶³⁵ Taka-mi-musu-bi-no-kami, first mentioned at the very commencement of the work. In this legend this god's name is constantly coupled with that of the Sun-Goddess, who alone, up to this point, had appeared as the ruler of Heaven.

⁶³⁶ See Sect. XIII, Note 12.

⁶³⁷ See Sect. XVI, Note 7.

⁶³⁸ The meaning must be, as Motowori suggests, that the story was told first, and the Deity Thought-Includer asked for his advice after he had heard it.

⁶³⁹ See Sect. I, Note 11.

⁶⁴⁰ See Sect. XIII, Note 19.

SECTION XXXI.—THE HEAVENLY-YOUNG-PRINCE

Therefore the High-August-Producing-Wondrous-Deity and the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity again asked all the Deities, saying: "The Deity Ame-no-ho-hi, whom we sent down to the Central Land of Reed-Plains, is long of bringing back a report. ⁶⁴¹ Which Deity were it best to send on a fresh mission?" ⁶⁴² Then the Deity Thought-Includer replied, saying: "The Heavenly-Young-Prince, ⁶⁴³ son of the Deity Heaven's-Earth-Spirit ⁶⁴⁴ should be sent." So they bestowed on him the Heavenly feathered arrows, ⁶⁴⁵ and sent him. Thereupon the Heavenly-Young-Prince, descending to that land, at once wedded Princess Under-Shining, ⁶⁴⁶ daughter of the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land, ⁶⁴⁷ and moreover, planning how he might gain [possession of] the land, for eight years brought back no report. So then the High-August-Producing-Wondrous-Deity and the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity again asked all the Deities, [saying]: "The Heavenly-Young-Prince is long of bringing back a report. ⁶⁴⁸ Which Deity shall we send on a fresh mission to enquire the cause of the Heavenly-Young-Prince's long tarrying?" Thereupon all the Deities and likewise the Deity Thought-Includer replied, saying: "The pheasant the Name-Crying-Female ⁶⁴⁹ should be sent," upon which [the High-August-Producing-Wondrous-Deity and the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity] charged [the pheasant], saying: "What thou shalt go and ask the Heavenly-Young-Prince is this: 'The reason for which thou wast sent to the Central Land of Reed-Plains was to subdue and pacify the savage Deities of that land. Why for eight years bringest thou back no report?'" So then the Crying-Female, descending from Heaven, and perching on the multitudinous [-ly-branching] cassia-tree ⁶⁵⁰ at the Heavenly-Young-Prince's gate, told him everything according to the mandate of the Heavenly Deities. Then the Heavenly-Spying-Woman, ⁶⁵¹ having heard the bird's words, spoke to the ⁶⁴¹ Literally, "long brings back no report."

⁶⁴² Literally, "to send again." The same expression occurs below.

⁶⁴³ Ame-waka-hiko. All the commentators agree that it is in order to express disapprobation of this god's wickedness that the title of Deity or Augustness is never coupled with his name.

⁶⁴⁴ Ame-tsu-kuni-tama-no-kami.

⁶⁴⁵ Ame-no-koko-yumi and ame-no-haha-ya. In Sect. XXXIV these weapons are mentioned under the slightly altered names of ama-no-hazhi-yumi ("heavenly vegetable wax-tree bow") and ama-no-kaku-ya ("heavenly deer-arrows.") A large bow made of vegetable wax-tree (Rhus succedanea) wood, and arrows with broad feathers, are supposed to be intended.

⁶⁴⁶ Shita-teru-hime. See Sect. XXVI, Note 4.

⁶⁴⁷ Oho-kuni-nushi-no-kami. See Sect. XX, Note 17.

⁶⁴⁸ Literally, "long brings back no report."

⁶⁴⁹ Na-naki-me. If the view here taken of the meaning of the Japanese expression be correct (it is that preferred by Motowori and Hirata), the pheasant would seem to have been supposed to cry out its own name,—in Archaic Japanese kigishi. The syllables na naki me, however, lend, themselves equally well to the interpretation of "nameless female," and are in the "Chronicles" found written with characters having that signification. Another reasonable opinion is that the name should be connected with the tradition mentioned further on of the pheasant having been the mourner (lit. "crying female," naki-me) at the funeral of the Heavenly-Young-Prince. In this case the word na, "name," would have to be considered redundant, and it will be observed that the next time the name is mentioned, we find simply naki-me, "crying female," without the syllable in question.

⁶⁵⁰ Katsura no-ki, variously written 桂, 楓, 香木, 杜木, and phonetically 加都羅. Though it is not absolutely certain what tree is intended, the weight of authority and of probability is in favour of its being the cassia, which plays a part in Chinese mythology. In modern parlance the katsura is a tree whose Latin name is Cercidiphyllum japonicum.

⁶⁵¹ Ama-no-sagu-me.

Heavenly-Young-Prince, saying: "The sound of this bird's cry is very bad. So thou shouldst shoot it to earth." On her [thus] urging him, the Heavenly-Young-Prince at once took the heavenly vegetable wax-tree bow and the heavenly deer-arrows bestowed on him by the Heavenly Deities, and shot the pheasant to death. Then the arrow, being shot up upside down ⁶⁵² through the pheasant's breast, reached the august place where the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity and the High-Integrating-Deity ⁶⁵³ were sitting in the bed of the Tranquil River of Heaven. This "High-integrating-Deity" is another name for the High-August-Producing-Wondrous-Deity. So, on the High-Integrating-Deity taking up the arrow and looking at it [he saw that] there was blood adhering to the feathers of the arrow. Thereupon the High-Integrating-Deity, saying: "This arrow is the arrow that was bestowed on the Heavenly-Young-Prince," showed it to all the Deities, and said: "If this be an arrow shot at the evil Deities by the Heavenly-Young-Prince in obedience to our command, let it not hit him. If he has a foul heart, let the Heavenly-Young-Prince perish ⁶⁵⁴ by this arrow." With these words, the took the arrow and thrust it back down through the arrow's hole, ⁶⁵⁵ so that it hit the Heavenly-Young-Prince on the top of his breast ⁶⁵⁶ as he was sleeping on his couch, so that he died. (This is the origin of [the saying] Beware of a returning arrow. ⁶⁵⁷) Moreover the pheasant returned not. So this is the origin of the modern proverb which speaks of 'the pheasant as sole messenger.' ⁶⁵⁸ So the sound of the wailings of the Heavenly-Young-Prince's wife Princess Under-Shining, re-echoing in the wind, reached Heaven. So the Heavenly-Young-Prince's father, the Deity Heaven's-Earth-Spirit, and his wife and children ⁶⁵⁹ who were in heaven, hearing it, came down with cries and lamentations, and at once built a mourning-house there, ⁶⁶⁰ and made the wild goose of ⁶⁵² This expression, as Motowori explains, signifies only that, as the arrow was shot from below straight up at a pheasant perching on a branch overhead, the feathers, which are properly considered to form the top part of the arrow, were naturally underneath.

⁶⁵³ Taka-gi-no-kami. The name is written with the characters 高木神, which, taken ideographically, would give us in English "High-Tree-Deity." But the translator has little doubt but that Motowori is correct in considering 木 to be here used phonetically, and the syllable gi, which it represents, to be a contraction of guhi (for kuhi), itself derived from kumu, and best rendered by the Verb "to integrate."

⁶⁵⁴ In Japanese magare, lit. "turn aside," "become crooked," i.e., "come to a bad end."

⁶⁵⁵ i.e., through the hole in the bottom of the sky through which the arrow had entered, or which the arrow had made for itself.

⁶⁵⁶ Literally "high breast-hill."

⁶⁵⁷ The sentence placed between brackets is supposed by Motowori to be an addition to the text made by some copyist who had in his mind the parallel passage of the "Chronicles." In the "Records of Ancient Matters Revised" the two characters answering to our word "beware" are omitted, and the resulting meaning is: "This was the origin of the practice of sending back arrows," i.e., of shooting an enemy with the arrow he had himself just used.

⁶⁵⁸ The import of the proverb seems to be that an embassy should always consist of more than one person.

This is Motowori's view, based on his interpretation of the character 頓 as hita, which he identifies with hito, "one"; and it agrees well with the story in the text. Hirata, who, in his "Exposition of the Ancient Histories," following the version of the legend given in the "Chronicles," narrates two pheasant embassies,—the male bird being sent first and (as it did not return) the female afterwards,—takes the character in the proper sense belonging to it in Chinese, and interprets the words of the proverb to mean "the pheasant's hurried embassy."

⁶⁵⁹ i.e., the wife and children of the Heavenly-Young-Prince, who had been left behind by him in Heaven when he went on his embassy to Idzumo.

⁶⁶⁰ i.e., in the place where he died. The "mourning house" was used to keep the corpse in till it was finally buried.

the river ⁶⁶¹ the head-hanging bearer ⁶⁶² the heron the broom-bearer, the kingfisher the person of the august food, the sparrow the pounding-woman, ⁶⁶³ the pheasant the weeping woman; and, having thus arranged matters, they disported themselves ⁶⁶⁴ for eight days and eight nights, At this time the Deity Ajishiki-taka-hiko-ne ⁶⁶⁵ came and condoled on the mourning for the Heavenly-Young-Prince, whereupon the Heavenly-Young-Prince's father and wife who had come down from Heaven bewailed themselves, ⁶⁶⁶ saying: "My child is not dead, no! My lord is not dead, no!" and with these words clung to his hands and feet, and bewailed themselves and lamented. The cause of their mistake was that the two Deities closely resembled each other in countenance: so therefore they made the mistake. Thereupon the Deity Ajishi-ki-taka-hiko-ne was very angry, and said: "It was only because he was my dear friend that I came to condole. Why should I be likened to an unclean dead person?"—and with these words he drew the ten-grasp sabre ⁶⁶⁷ that was augustly girded on him, and cut down the mourning-house, and kicked away [the pieces] with his feet. This was on what is called Mount Mourning ⁶⁶⁸ at the source of the River Awimi ⁶⁶⁹ in the land of Minu. ⁶⁷⁰ The great sword with which he cut [the mourning-house to pieces] was called by the name of Great-Blade-Mower, ⁶⁷¹ another name by which it was called being the Divine-Keen-Sabre. ⁶⁷² So when the Deity Aji-shiki-toba-hiko-ne flew away in his anger, his younger sister Her Augustness the High-Princess in order to reveal his august name, sang, saying:

⁶⁶¹ Some of the commentators believe this bird to be a separate species, and Moribe, who says that he saw one at the estuary near Kuhana in Ise, describes it as "rather slenderer than an ordinary wild goose, with longer legs and a higher back." If we accepted this, the better English translation would be "river wild goose."

⁶⁶² The original of this expression (kisari-mochi) is very obscure even in the "Chronicles," by whose ideographic reading the translator has been guided, and being here written phonetically becomes more conjectural still. The most likely opinion is that it signifies one bearing on his head the food to be offered to the corpse, though if this view be adopted, the office of the mourner in question may seem to resemble too closely that of the kingfisher. The latter has however been supposed to have brought fish, while the goose may have brought rice. Another proposal is that the goose brought the food and the kingfisher cooked it, while the sparrow, as mentioned below, performed the intermediate operation of pounding the rice. (See Motowori's elaborate note on this word in Vol. XIII, pp. 47-48 of his Commentary).

⁶⁶³ Or simply, "the pounder."

⁶⁶⁴ The parallel passage of the "Chronicles" tells us that "they wept and wailed and sang for eight days and eight nights."

⁶⁶⁵ See Sect. XXVI, Note 2. He was brother to the Heavenly-Young-Prince's wife.

⁶⁶⁶ The author of the "Perpetual Commentary on the Chronicles of Japan" tells us that these tears were tears of joy, Doubtless such is the meaning of the text; yet the repetition of the words "bewailing" and "lamenting" is curious.

⁶⁶⁷ See Sect. VIII. Note 4.

⁶⁶⁸ Mo-yama. No such mountain is now known.

⁶⁶⁹ Awimi-gaha. No such river is now known. According to the characters with which it is written the name signifies "Knot-grass-Seeing River."

⁶⁷⁰ Afterwards called Mino. This province probably received its name, as the author of the "Explanation of Japanese Names" suggests, from mi nu, i.e., "three moors," from the large moors of Kagami, Awo, and Seki-gahara which it contains. The modern commentators prefer to derive it from ma nu, "true moor."

⁶⁷¹ Oho-ha-hari. The name might also be rendered "Great Leaf-Mower." The translator has followed Hirata in omitting the nigori from the syllable ka.

⁶⁷² Kamudo-tsurugi.

"Oh! 'tis the Deity Aji-shiki-Taka-Hiko-Ne traversing two august valleys with the refulgence of august assembled hole-jewels, of the august assembled jewels worn round her neck by the Weaving Maiden in Heaven!" ⁶⁷³

This Song is of a Rustic Style. ⁶⁷⁴

⁶⁷³ The meaning of the Song is: "Oh! this is Aji-shihi-taka-hiko-ne, whose refulgence, similar to that of the jewels worn by the Weaving Maiden in Heaven, shines afar across hills and valleys."—The translator does not follow those commentators who emend ana-dama, "hole-jewels" to aka-dama, "red," i.e. "resplendent jewels," as the frequent reference in this and the other ancient books to the string on which beads were strung, and the presence in ancient tombs, etc. of numbers of such beads with holes drilled through them (they are now known by the name of kuda-dama, i.e. "tube-jewels") renders such an emendation unnecessary. The "Weaving Maiden in Heaven" is evidently, notwithstanding Motowori's endeavour to disprove the fact, the Chinese Chih Nü, a personification of α Lyrae, to whom there are countless allusions in Chinese literature, and who also became a frequent theme of the later Japanese poets.

⁶⁷⁴ Or, "barbarous style" Motowori endeavours to explain away the various names of styles of Songs found in the early literature by asserting that they are simply derived from the initial words of the Song in question, and that, for instance, in the present case, the title of Rustic Song was bestowed on the poem only because in the "Chronicles" it is coupled with another which lends itself to such an interpretation. Moribe gives his sanction to this view; but, though it is difficult to explain many of the titles on any other theory, the translator thinks that it cannot be accepted as generally satisfactory in the face of the numerous cases which contradict it, and of which its supporters can give no satisfactory explanation. The whole subject of the titles, of the manner of singing, etc., of the ancient poems is indeed involved in obscurity.

SECTION XXXII.—ABDICATION OF THE DEITY MASTER-OF-THE-GREAT-LAND

Hereupon the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity said: "Which Deity were it best to send on a fresh mission?" ⁶⁷⁵ Then the Deity Thought-Includer and likewise all the Deities said: "He who is named the Deity Majestic-Point-Blade-Extended ⁶⁷⁶ and dwells in the Heavenly Rock-Dwelling by the source of the Tranquil River of Heaven, is the one that should be sent: or if not this Deity, then this Deity's child, the Brave-Awful-Possessing-Male-Deity, ⁶⁷⁷ might be sent. Moreover, ⁶⁷⁸ owing to this Deity Heavenly-Point-Blade-Extended having blocked up and turned back the waters of the Tranquil River of Heaven, and to his dwelling with the road blocked up, other Deities cannot go [thither]. So the Heavenly-Deer-Deity ⁶⁷⁹ should be sent specially to ask him." So then the Heavenly-Deer-Deity was sent to ask the Deity Heaven-Point-Blade-Extended, who replied, saying: "I will obey, and will respectfully serve you. Nevertheless on this errand ⁶⁸⁰ ye should send my ⁶⁸¹ child, the Brave-Awful-Possessing-Male-Deity," ⁶⁸²—[and with these words] immediately offered [his son to Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity]. So the Deity Heavenly-Bird-Boat ⁶⁸³ was attached to the Brave-Awful-Possessing-Male-Deity, and they were sent off. Therefore these two Deities, descending to the little shore ⁶⁸⁴ of Inasa ⁶⁸⁵ in the land of Idzumo, drew their swords ten hand-breadths long, ⁶⁸⁶ stuck them upside down ⁶⁸⁷ on the crest of a wave, seated themselves cross-legged ⁶⁸⁸ on the points of the swords, and asked the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land, saying "The Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity and the High-Integrating-Deity have charged us and sent us to ask, [saying]: 'We have deigned to charge our august child with thy dominion, the Central Land of Reed-Plains, as the land which he should govern. So how is thy heart?'" ⁶⁸⁹ He replied, saying: "I ⁶⁹⁰ am unable to say. My child the ⁶⁷⁵ Literally, "to send again."

⁶⁷⁶ Itsu-no-wo-ha-bari no kami. We have already seen (Sect. VIII, Note 15) this name (minus the title of Deity) as the appellation of the sword with which Izanagi ("the Male-Who-Invites") decapitated his son p. 125 Kagusu-chi ("Shining Elder") for having by his birth caused the death of Izanami ("the Female-Who-Invites.") This sword's alternative name appears immediately below as the alternative name of this deity,—Ame-no-wo-ha-bari-no-kami, i.e., "the Deity Heavenly-Point-Blade-Extended." Motowori's gloss to the effect that the deity was the spirit of the sword has no warrant from the text.

⁶⁷⁷ Take-mika-dzu-chi-no-wo-no-kami. See Sect. VIII, Note 7.

⁶⁷⁸ Here, as in Sect. IX, (Note 6) the character 且, "moreover," occurs where some other Conjunction would seem more appropriate both in Japanese and in English. We may here understand it to be used for but."

⁶⁷⁹ Ame-no-kaku-no-kami. The interpretation of kaku as "deer" is Hirata's. See his "Exposition of the Ancient Histories," Vol. XXII, p. 6. and conf. the remarks on Mount Kagu in Sect. VII, Note 12 of this translation.

⁶⁸⁰ Literally, "in this road."

⁶⁸¹ The First Personal Pronoun is here represented by the humble character 僕, "servant"

⁶⁸² See Sect. VIII, Note 7.

⁶⁸³ Tori-bune-no-kami. See Sect. VI, Note 24.

⁶⁸⁴ The word "little" is merely a sort of Honorific Expletive.

⁶⁸⁵ The true etymology of this word is doubtful; for Motowori's proposal to derive it from ina se, supposed to mean "no, or yes" (諾否), in allusion to the question here put to the Deity Master-of-the-Great-land is a mere fancy, and does not provide for the alternative forms Itasa and Isasa, which occur in other documents.

⁶⁸⁶ See Sect. VIII, Note 1.

⁶⁸⁷ i.e., as Motowori explains, hilt downwards.

⁶⁸⁸ The "Chronicles" say that they "squatted."

⁶⁸⁹ i.e., "What sayest thou to this our decree?"

⁶⁹⁰ Here and below the humble character 僕, "servant," is used for the First Personal Pronoun.

Deity Eight-Fold-Thing-Sign-Master ⁶⁹¹ will be the one to tell you; but he is gone to Cape Miho ⁶⁹² to pursue birds and catch fish, and has not yet returned." So then the Deity Bird-Boat was sent to summon the Deity Eight-Fold-Thing-Sign-Master, who, on being graciously asked, spoke to the Great Deity his father, saying: "I will obey. [Do thou] ⁶⁹³ respectfully present this land to the august child of the Heavenly Deity;"—and thereupon he trod on [the edge of] his boat so as to capsize it, clapped his heavenly departing hands in the fence of green branches, and disappeared. ⁶⁹⁴ So then they asked the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land, saying: "Thy son the Deity Thing-Sign-Master has now spoken thus. Hast thou other sons who should speak?" Hereupon he spoke again, saying: "There is my other son, the Deity Brave-August-Name-Firm. ⁶⁹⁵ There is none beside him." While he was thus speaking, the Deity Brave-August-Name-Firm came up, bearing on the tips of his fingers a thousand-draught rock, ⁶⁹⁶ and said: "Who is it that has come to our land, and thus secretly talks? If that be so, ⁶⁹⁷ I should like to have a trial of strength. So I should like to begin by taking thine august hand." So on his letting him take his august hand, his touch at once turned it into an icicle, and again his touch turned it into a sword-blade. ⁶⁹⁸ So then he was frightened and drew back. Then on the Brave-Awful-Possessing-Male-Deity wishing to take the hand of the Deity Brave-August-Name-Firm, and asking permission to take it in return, he grasped and crushed it as if it were taking a young reed, and cast it aside, upon which [the Deity Brave-August-Name-Firm] fled away. So when [the Brave-Awful-Possessing-Male-Deity] pursuing after him, came up with him at the Sea of Suha ⁶⁹⁹ in the land of Shinanu, ⁷⁰⁰ and was about to slay him, the Deity Brave-August-Name-Firm said: "I will obey. Slay me not. I will go to no other place but this, neither will I go against the command of my father the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land. I will not go against the words of the Deity Eight-Fold-Thing-Sign-Master. I Will yield up this Central Land of Reed-Plains according to the command of the august child of the Heavenly Deities." So they returned again, and asked the Deity Master-of-the Great-Land [saying]: "Thy children the two Deities the Deity Thing-Sign-⁶⁹¹ Ya-he-koto-shiro-nu-shi-no-kami. For this difficult name see Sect. XXVI, Note 7.

⁶⁹² See Sect. XXVII, Note 1.

⁶⁹³ Or, "We will."

⁶⁹⁴ I.e., He capsized his boat and himself into the sea,—the place being one where (as is still done in Japan) a large space of shallow water had been fenced in with posts, and stuck over with branches of p. 126 trees, a single opening being left for fish to enter by,—then clapped his hands in token of departure, and sank to the bottom.—This is Hirata's interpretation of the passage, which is a difficult one, and is differently understood by Motowori, whom Mr. Satow has followed in one of his notes to the Rituals (see Vol. VII, Pt. II, p. 122 of these "Transactions"), rendering it thus: "He then trod upon the edge of his boat so as to overturn it and with his hands crossed back to back (in token of consent), transformed his boat into a green fence of branches, and disappeared." A careful comparison of the remarks in Motowori's Commentary (Vol. XIV, pp. 16-19) with those in Hirata's "Exposition of the Ancient Histories" (Vol. XXII, pp. 50-55) and with the text itself, as also with the text of the parallel passage in the "Chronicles," has however left no doubt in the mind of the translator that Hirata's view is the correct one.

⁶⁹⁵ Take-mi-gata-no-kami. The interpretation of the name is that proposed by Motowori.

⁶⁹⁶ I.e., a rock which it would take a thousand men to lift.

⁶⁹⁷ This expression seems here, as Motowori says, to be used in the sense of "Come on!" It has survived in the modern word saraba, which sometimes has that meaning.

⁶⁹⁸ I.e., the Brave-Awful-Male-Deity's hand turned first into an icicle and next into a sword-blade on being touched by the Deity Brave-August-Name-Firm, to the alarm and hurt of the latter.

⁶⁹⁹ I.e., the Lake of Suha. No satisfactory etymology of the name is forthcoming.

⁷⁰⁰ In later times called Shinano. The usual derivation of the word is that which connects it with shina-zaka; "mountainous ascents,"—an appropriate enough name for the province in question. It is, however, more probably derived from shina, the name of a tree resembling the lime (Tilia cordata) and nu orno, "moor."

Master and the Deity Brave-August-Name-Firm have said that they will follow and not go against the commands of the august child of the Heavenly Deities. So how is thy heart?" Then he replied, saying: According as the two Deities my children have said, I too will not go against them. In accordance with the [heavenly] command, I will at once yield up this Central Land of Reed-Plains. But as to my place of residence, if ye will make stout the temple pillars on the nethermost rock-bottom, and make high the cross-beams to the Plain of High Heaven like the rich and perfect august nest where the august child of the Heavenly Deities rules the succession of Heaven's sun, and will deign to establish me, I will hide in the eighty (less than a hundred) road-windings, and wait on him. Again, as for my children the hundred and eighty Deities, if the Deity Eight-Fold-Thing-Sign-Master will be the Deities, august rear and van and will respectfully serve them, there will be no disobedient Deities." ⁷⁰¹ Having thus spoken [he hid himself. ⁷⁰² So in accordance with his word, ⁷⁰³] they built a heavenly august abode on the shore ⁷⁰⁴ of Tagishi ⁷⁰⁵ in the land of Idzumo; and the Deity Wondrous-Eight-Spirits, ⁷⁰⁶ grandson of the Deity Of Water-Gates, ⁷⁰⁷ was made butler to offer up the heavenly august banquet, when, ⁷⁰⁸ having said prayers, the Deity Wondrous-Eight-Spirits turned into a cormorant, went down to the bottom of the sea, took in his mouth red earth from the bottom, made eighty heavenly platters, and, cutting sea-weed ⁷⁰⁹ stalks, made a fire-drill mortar, and made a fire-drill pestle out of stalks of komo, ⁷¹⁰ and drilled out fire, saying:

⁷⁰¹ I.e. "If ye will build me a temple founded on the nethermost rocks and reaching up to Heaven like unto the august residence of the Heavenly Deity who is coming to replace me as sovereign upon earth, I will vanish to Hades, and serve him there; and as for the Gods my children, none of them will rebel against their new Lord, if the Deity Thing-Sign-Master be accepted as the protector of his escort."—Some of the expressions in the original stand in need of explanation. Su, here rendered "nest" in accordance with the character 巢 employed in writing it, may mean "lattice" (簀), and refer to the lattice-work over the hole p. 127 in the chimney of the roof. The "succession of Heaven's sun" (in Japanese ama-tsu-hi-tsugi) means the inheritance of the sovereignty of Japan, or of Idzumo. Momotaradzu ("less than a hundred") is the Pillow-Word for ya se, "eighty," and for some other words; it must be disregarded in making sense of any sentence in which it occurs. The "eighty road-windings" signify, says Motowori, "an immensely long way," and are here meant for the long road leading to Hades or for Hades itself (Conf. Sect. XCVI, Note 7). In rendering the last sentence of the passage (that commencing "Again, as for my children," etc.). which is particularly vague, the translator has been guided by Motowori's opinion, which seems the most satisfactory one. It must be understood that the deities whose rear and van the Deity Thing-Sign-Master is to become, are those who are about to escort the new sovereign down from heaven.

⁷⁰² I.e., disappeared.

⁷⁰³ The passage placed within brackets is supplied by Motowori to fill up an evident omission in the text.

⁷⁰⁴ Literally "little shore." See Note 10 to this Section.

⁷⁰⁵ The derivation of Tagishi is doubtful; but conf. Sect. LXXIX, Note 2. Motowori remarks that we seem to have here the old name of the place now known only, on account of the temple which it contains, as Kidzuki no Oho-yashiro, i.e. "the pestle-hardened great shrine."

⁷⁰⁶ Kushi-ya-tama-no-kami. Motowori proposes to consider tama as a contraction of tamuke, "offering," and to take the name to signify "the Deity of Wondrous Increasing Offerings." Hirata's interpretation, which is followed in the translation, seems better, as the term "eight spirits" or "eight [fold] spirit" accords with the religious role attributed to this Deity without necessitating any hazardous philological conjectures. The actual character used to write the disputed word is 玉, "jewel."

⁷⁰⁷ See Sect. VI, Note 9.

⁷⁰⁸ The word "when" must be understood presumptively, as signifying that the way in which he carried out his task was by turning into a cormorant, making platters, etc.

⁷⁰⁹ It is uncertain whether the word me (海布), here rendered seaweed, is a general designation or the name of the particular species.

⁷¹⁰ Supposed to be the same as, or similar to the modern hondahara (Halochola macrantha).

"This fire which I have drilled will I burn until, in the Plain of High Heaven, the soot on the heavenly new lattice of the gable of His Augustness the Wondrous-Divine-Producer-the-August-Ancestor ⁷¹¹ hang down eight hand-breadths; and as for what is below the earth, I will bake down to the nethermost rock-bottom, and,—the fishing sailors, who spread their thousand-fathom ropes of paper-mulberry and angle, having with many shouts drawn in and landed the large-mouthed small-finned perch,—I will offer up the heavenly true fish-food so that the split bamboos bend." ⁷¹² So the Brave-Awful-Possessing-Male-Deity re-ascended [to Heaven], and reported how he had subdued and pacified the Central Land of Reed-Plains.

⁷¹¹ Kamu-musu-bi-mi-o-ya-no-kami.

⁷¹² The translator has followed Moribe in the interpretation of the first part and Hirata in the interpretation of the latter part of this extremely difficult passage, which is a crux to all the commentators, but p. 128 whose general sense at least is this: "I will continue drilling fire for the God's kitchen, until the soot hangs down from the roof of the temple of the Ancestral Deity in Heaven above, and until the earth below is baked down to its nethermost rocks; and with the fire thus drilled will I cook for him the fish brought in by the fishermen, and present them to him in baskets woven of split bamboos which will bend beneath their weight."—Another plausible interpretation of the original expression rendered by these last two words is that they are simply the Pillow-Word fortowowo-towowo ni, "bending." The rope with which the fishermen are supposed to have angled is described in detail by Hirata ("Exposition of the Ancient Histories," Vol. XXIV, p. 21) as a long rope from which other strings, each with a hook attached, depended, and is said by him to be still in use in the provinces of Shimofusa (Shimōsa) and Hitachi. The "lattice of the gable" must be understood to mean bamboo lattice covering a hole beneath the gable, which served as a chimney. Motowori's remarks on this passage will be found in Vol. XIV, pp. 39-42 of his Commentary, and Moribe's on the words to-daru ama no nihi-su (rendered "on the heavenly new lattice of the gable") in his "Examination of Difficult Words," Vol. II. pp. 26-29; the latter especially are well worth perusal by the student. Mr. Satow, in one of the notes to his translation of the Rituals, (See Vol. IX, Pt. II, p. 209 of these "Transactions"), gives a somewhat divergent rendering of this passage, following, as he does, the interpretation given by Motowori. It is as follows: "The fire which I have drilled will I burn until the soot of the rich and sufficing heavenly new nest of the PARENT Kami-musubi in heaven hangs down many hand-breadths long, and the earth below will I bake down to its bottom-most rocks, and stretching a thousand fathoms of paper-mulberry rope, will draw together and bring ashore the fisherman's large-mouthed small-finned suzuki, [and] will offer up the heavenly fish-food on bending split bamboos."

SECTION XXXIII.—THE AUGUST DESCENT FROM HEAVEN OF HIS AUGUSTNESS THE AUGUST GRANDCHILD

Then the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity and the High-Integrity-Deity ⁷¹³ commanded and charged the Heir Apparent ⁷¹⁴ His Augustness Truly-Conqueror-I-Conquer-Swift-Heavenly-Great-Great-Ears ⁷¹⁵ [saying: The Brave-Awful-Possessing-Male-Deity] says that he has now finished-pacifying the Central Land of Reed-Plains. So do thou, in accordance with our gracious charge, descend to and dwell in and rule over it." Then the Heir Apparent His Augustness Truly-Conqueror-I-Conquer-Conquering-Swift-Heavenly-Great-Ears replied, saying: "While I ⁷¹⁶ have been getting ready to descend, there has been born [to me] a child whose name is His Augustness Heaven-Plenty-Earth-Plenty-Heaven's-Sun-Height-Prince-Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty. ⁷¹⁷ This child should be sent down." [⁷¹⁸As for this august child, ⁷¹⁹ he was augustly joined to Her Augustness Myriad-Looms-Luxuriant-Dragon-fly-Island-Princess, ⁷²⁰ daughter of the High-Integrating-Deity, and begot children: His ⁷¹³ Taka-no-kami. See Sect. XXXI, Note 13.

⁷¹⁴ It will be remembered that this god was son of the Sun-goddess (or of her brother Susa-no-wo, "the Impetuous Male";—see Sect. XII, Note 18, and also the first two sentences of Sect. XIV and the first sentence of Sect. XV). The characters rendered "Heir Apparent" are 太子, which form the usual Chinese equivalent of that term, and were borrowed by the Japanese. Motowori's reading of them as Hi-tsugi-no-miko, "Prince of the Sun's Succession," has no authority but his own patriotic fancy.

⁷¹⁵ For this tremendous name see Sect. XIII, Note 18.

⁷¹⁶ The humble character 僕, "servant" is used for the First Personal Pronoun.

⁷¹⁷ Ame-nigishi-kuni-nigishi-ama-tsu-hi-daka-hiko-ho-no-ni-nigi-no-mi-koto. Excepting as regards the final gi of ni-nigi, which it is surely better with Hirata to consider as helping to form the word nigi, "plenty," than to take it as a separate word signifying "lord," as Motowori does, the translation follows Motowori's interpretation of the various component parts of this tremendous name, which is mostly abbreviated to its latter portion. It is precisely to this latter portion (the syllables hiko ho-no nigi) that considerable doubt attaches. Ho might mean "fire" rather than "rice-ears," and Motowori himself suggests that ni-nigi should perhaps be regarded as a corruption of nigi-kahi, "plentiful spikes of grain," rather than as "ruddy plenty." About the meaning of the rest of the name there cannot be much doubt. "Heaven's Sun Height" must be understood as an honorific designation signifying "high as the sun in heaven."

⁷¹⁸ The translator puts this sentence between brackets because it is an evident interruption of the main story. Indeed the edition of 1688 prints it as a note to the text. The grammar of it is curious, as, on a first reading, one would be tempted to suppose that this child, i.e., His August Ame-nigishi-kuni-nigishi-amatsu-hi-daka-hiko-ho-no-ni-nigi, was the father of Hiko-ho-no-ni-nigi. But the latter name is but an abbreviated form of the former, and the god could not be his own father. The meaning rather is (and such a construction is not so forced in Japanese as it sounds in English): "As for the parentage of this child, he was born of the marriage [of His Augustness Truly-Conqueror-etc.] with Her Augustness Myriad-Looms-etc. Princess. There is, however, real confusion in the traditional genealogy, as the "Chronicles" make the deity in question father to His Augustness Heavenly-Rice-ear-Ruddy, instead of younger brother.

⁷¹⁹ Viz. His Augustness Truly-Conqueror-etc.

⁷²⁰ Yorodzu-hata-toyo-aki-dzu-shi-hime-no-mikoto. Mabuchi, as quoted by Motowori, suggests that yorodzu, "myriad," should be connected with the word yoroshi "good," as signifying an extreme degree, the ne plus ultra. But, though perhaps a good guess at the origin in the word, it need not affect our estimate of its actual signification. The translator has, however, followed Mabuchi in considering the syllable shi as an apocopated form of shima, "island," and Aki-dzu-shi[ma] as having its usual signification of "Dragon-fly Island" (more literally "Island of the Autumn Insect") rather than accept Motowori's explanation of shi as representing the Verb chijimu, "to be puckered," and of the whole compound aki-dzu-shi as signifying "crape like dragon-flies' wings." Not only is there no mention of crape in other passages of these "Records," but the derivation does not, to say the least, recommend itself on philological grounds.

Augustness-Heavenly-Rice-ear-Ruddy ⁷²¹ and next His Augustness Prince-Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty. ⁷²²] Therefore, in accordance with these words, they laid their command on His Augustness Prince Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty, deigning to charge him with these words: "This Luxuriant Reed-Plain-Land-of-Fresh-Rice-ears ⁷²³ is the land over which thou shalt rule." So [he replied]: "I will descend from Heaven according to your commands." So when His Augustness-Prince-Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty was about to descend from Heaven, there was at the eight-forking road of Heaven a Deity whose refulgence reached upwards to the Plain of High Heaven and downwards to the Central Land of Reed-Plains. So then the Heaven-Shining-Great-August Deity and the High-Integrating Deity commanded and charged the Heavenly-Alarming-Female-Deity ⁷²⁴ [saying]: Though thou art but a delicate female, thou art a Deity who conquers in facing Deities. ⁷²⁵ So be thou the one to go and ask thus: "This being the road by which our august child is about to descend from Heaven, who is it that is thus there?" ⁷²⁶ So to this gracious question he replied, saying "I ⁷²⁷ am an Earthly Deity named the Deity Prince of Saruta. ⁷²⁸ The reason for my coming here is that, having heard of the [intended] descent of the august child of the Heavenly Deities, I have come humbly to meet him and respectfully offer myself as His Augustness's vanguard." ⁷²⁹ Then joining to him His Augustness Heavenly-Beckoning-Ancestor-Lord, His Augustness Grand-Jewel, Her Augustness Heavenly-Alarming-Female, Her Augustness I-shi-ko-ri-do-me, and His Augustness Jewel-Ancestor, ⁷³⁰ in all five chiefs of companies, ⁷³¹ they sent him down from Heaven. Thereupon they joined to him the eight-foot [long] curved jewels and mirror that had allured [the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity from the Rock-Dwelling, ⁷³²] and, also the Herb-Quelling-Great-Sword, ⁷³³ and likewise the Deity Thought-Includer, the Hand-Strength-Male-Deity, and the Deity Heavenly-Rock-Door-

⁷²¹ Ame-no-ho-akari-no-Mikoto. The word rendered "ripe" will bear equally well the interpretation "red."

⁷²² Hiko-ho-no-ni-nigi, the abbreviated form of the name in Note 6.

⁷²³ Toyo-ashi-hara-no-midzu-hono-kuni. This periphrastic synonym of Japan has appeared under a slightly shorter form in Sect. IX (Note 18).

⁷²⁴ Ame-no-udzu-me-no-kami, the goddess whose loud, bold merriment was the chief cause of the Sun-Goddess emerging from her retreat in the Cavern (see Sect XVI, Note 28).

⁷²⁵ i.e., "The brazen-facedness allows thee to stare others out of countenance, and make them uneasy."

⁷²⁶ Between this sentence and the next, the Alarming-Female-Deity must be supposed to have gone on her embassy and to have delivered the message with which she had been entrusted.

⁷²⁷ Written 僕, literally "servant."

⁷²⁸ Saruta-biko-no-kami. This is Motowori's reading. The more usual reading is Saruda-hiko, transposing the nigori. Hirata prefers to read Sada-biko, and takes Saruda or Sada to be the name of a place, which indeed seems the most acceptable view. The name actually signifies "monkey field." Motowori's interpretation of its import is a marvellous example of Japanese etymological gymnastics (see Vol. XV, p. 16 of his Commentary).

Moribe's derivation from sari-hate-hiko (避果彦) is no better.

⁷²⁹ Or "guide."

⁷³⁰ For these five names and for the Deity Thought-Includer and the [Heavenly] Hand-Strength-Male-Deity mentioned a few lines further on, see Sect. XVI, Notes 15, 16, 28, 12, 13, 7, and 27 respectively.

⁷³¹ Tomo-no-wo. This expression is here taken to refer to the various offices assumed by the five deities in question at the time of the withdrawal of the Sun-Goddess into the cave. It signifies properly the head of a company.

⁷³² The allusion is to the story in Sect. XVI. Moribe, in his Critique on Motowori's Commentary, points out that it was only the mirror which allured the goddess from the cave. In the Japanese original of this passage, however, even more than in the English translation, the expression "that had allured" is made to both objects.

⁷³³ Obtained from the tail of the Serpent of Koshi. See the story in Sect. XVIII.

Opener ⁷³⁴ of Eternal Night, ⁷³⁵ and charged him thus: "Regard this mirror exactly as if it were our august spirit, and reverence it as if reverencing us." ⁷³⁶ Next did they say: "Let the Deity Thought-Includer take in hand our affairs, and carry on the government." These two Deities are worshipped at the temple of Isuzu. ⁷³⁷ The next, the Deity of Luxuriant-Food. ⁷³⁸ is the Deity dwelling in the outer temple of Watarahi. ⁷³⁹ The next, the Deity Heavenly-Rock-Door-Opener, another name for whom is the Wondrous-Rock-True-Gate-Deity, and another name for whom is the Luxuriant-Rock-True-Gate-Deity, ⁷⁴⁰—this Deity of the August Gate. ⁷⁴¹ The next, the Deity Hand-Strength-Male, dwells in Sanagata. ⁷⁴² Now His Augustness the Heavenly-Beckoning-Ancestor-Lord (is the ancestor of the Nakatomi Chieftains); ⁷⁴³ His Augustness Grand Jewel (is the ancestor of the Imibe Headmen); ⁷⁴⁴ Her Augustness the Heavenly-Alarming-Female (is the ancestress of the Duchesses of Saru ⁷⁴⁵); Her Augustness I-shi-ko-ri-do-me (is the ⁷³⁴ Ame-no-iha-to-wake-no-kami. Hirata observes that this must not be considered as the name of an independent Deity, but be taken simply as an alternative name of Ame-no-jikara-wo-no-kami (the "Heavenly-Hand-Strength-Male-Deity"). The part taken by this Deity in the legend narrated in Sect. XVI. seems a sufficient warrant for such an opinion, though a little lower down in this Section the two are again mentioned separately.

⁷³⁵ Toko-yo. These words, which, according to the rules of Japanese construction, are placed at the commencement of the clause, must be understood to apply either to the three gods collectively or to the first-mentioned (the Deity Thought-Includer) alone.

⁷³⁶ Or "worshipping before us," or "in our presence." The strictly logical concordance of an English sentence makes it appear as if the mirror were to be taken to represent the spirit of both Deities whose names are subjects of the first clause. In Japanese, however, all such concordances are much more loosely observed, and it is only the spirit of the Sun-Goddess that we must understand to be here intended.

⁷³⁷ Isuzu (literally "fifty bells," or else perhaps the name of a kind of grass with which the neighbourhood may originally have been overgrown) is the name of the site of the "Inner Temple" of Ise. It is in the Japanese text preceded by the Pillow-Word saku-kushiro, literally "rent bracelet." See Mabuchi's "Dictionary of Pillow-Words" s. v.

⁷³⁸ Toyo-uke-no-kami, the same as Toyo-uke-bime (see Sect. VII, Note 6). The mention of: this goddess in this place is curious, as she would not seem to be connected with the legend. Motowori, however, supposes that it is through some accidental omission that she does not figure in the list of deities said to have accompanied the heaven-descended Sovereign.

⁷³⁹ This name signifies "meeting when crossing" or "crossing to meet", and is connected by the commentators with an unimportant tradition, for which see Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XV, p. 48.

⁷⁴⁰ These two names are in the original Kushi-ihama-do-no-kami and Toyo-ihama-do-no-kami. The tradition in the "Gleanings of Ancient Story" makes them two separate deities.

⁷⁴¹ Viz. of the gate or gates of the Imperial Palace.

⁷⁴² Etymology obscure.

⁷⁴⁴ Imibe no obito. Imibe is derived from imu, "to avoid," i.e. "to abstain from," and mure, "a flock" or "collection of persons," "a clan," and refers to the religious duties of this hereditary class of priests, which naturally required their avoidance of all ceremonial uncleanness. The word "priest" would fairly, though freely, represent the meaning of the compound.

⁷⁴⁵ Saru me no kimi. For the traditional origin of this name see Sect. XXXV. These "duchesses" were priestesses: but it is a matter of dispute between the commentators whether the title was simply an official one, or hereditary in the female line.

ancestress of the Mirror-Making Chieftains); ⁷⁴⁶ His Augustness-jewel-Ancestor (is the ancestor of the Jewel-Ancestor Chieftains). ⁷⁴⁷ ⁷⁴⁶ Kagami-tsukuri no murazhi. Of this family nothing would seem to be known.

⁷⁴⁷ Tama-no-ya (or Tama n'Oya) no murazhi. But the name should probably be Tama-tsukuri no murazhi, i.e. "Jewel-Making Chieftains," a "gentile name" which is found in the later literature. Perhaps, however, we should understand both this means and the previous one to be simple inventions by names, of which divine ancestry was claimed for the hereditary guilds of jewellers and mirror-makers.

SECTION XXXIV.—THE AUGUST REIGN IN HIMUKA OF HIS AUGUSTNESS PRINCE RICE-EAR-RUDDY-PLENTY ⁷⁴⁸

So then [the Heaven-Shining-Great-August-Deity and the High-Integrating-Deity] commanded ⁷⁴⁹ His Augustness Heaven's-Prince-Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty; and he, leaving the Heavenly Rock-Seat, ⁷⁵⁰ pushing asunder the eight-fold heavenly spreading clouds, and dividing a road with a mighty road-dividing, set off floating shut up in the Floating Bridge of Heaven, ⁷⁵¹ and descended from Heaven onto the peak of Kuzhifuru which is Takachiho in Tsu-kushi. ⁷⁵² So His Heavenly Great Wondrous Augustness ⁷⁵³ and His Augustness Heaven's-Round-Eyes, ⁷⁵⁴ both ⁷⁵⁵ taking on their backs the Heavenly rock-quivers, ⁷⁵⁶ taking at their side the large mallet-headed swords, ⁷⁵⁷ taking in their hands the Heavenly vegetable-wax-tree bow, ⁷⁵⁸ and clasping under their arms the Heavenly ⁷⁴⁸ Motowori makes Sect. XXXIV commence here, and it seems on the whole best to follow him in so doing, as the entire period of the reign on earth of the first of the heaven-descended gods is thus included in one Section. On the other hand, the "Descent from Heaven," which gives its name to the preceding Sect., cannot properly be said to be accomplished until the end of this first sentence of Sect. XXXIV. It will be remembered that the Japanese name of this first deity-king is (in its abbreviated and most commonly used form) Hiko-no-ni-nigi.

⁷⁴⁹ Motowori proposes to suppress the character 詔, "commanded," in this clause, and the character 而, "and," at the beginning of the next, and to take the Prince as the subject of the whole sentence. This would be convenient; but the characters 詔 and 而 are in all the texts.

⁷⁵⁰ I.e., his place in Heaven. The original Japanese of the term is ama-no-ikakura.

⁷⁵¹ The translator has adopted the interpretation proposed by Hirata, the only commentator who gives an acceptable view of this extremely difficult clause, which Motowori admitted that he did not understand. It must be remembered that Hirata identifies the "Floating Bridge of Heaven" with the "Heavenly Rock-Boat." (For details see his "Exposition of the Ancient Histories," Vol. XXVII, pp. 31-32).

⁷⁵² Tsukushi, anciently the name of the whole of the large island forming the South-Western corner of Japan, and Himuka (in modern pronunciation Hiuga), one of the provinces into which that island is divided, have already been mentioned in Sect. V, Note 14 and Sect. X, Note 4 respectively. It is uncertain whether the mountain here named is the modern Takachiho-yama or Kirishima-yama, but the latter view is generally preferred. Kuzhifuru is explained (perhaps somewhat hazardously) as meaning "wondrous," while Taka-chi-ho signifies "high-thousand-rice-ears."

⁷⁵³ Ame-no-oshi-hi no mikoto. The interpretation is only conjectural.

⁷⁵⁴ Ama-tsu-kume no mikoto. The traditional origin of this curious name will be found below in the third and fourth Songs of Sect. LI (see Notes 21 and 22 to that Section), where the "sharp slit eyes" of this worthy are specially referred to. But Moribe seems to prove that kume is in reality not a personal name at all, but simply the old term for p. 137 "army," through a misconception of the original import of which has arisen the idea that Oho-kume and Oho-tomo were two distinct personages. The elaborate and interesting note on this subject in his "Examination of Difficult Words," Vol. II., pp. 46-55 is well worth consulting. The only point in which the present writer differs from him is with regard to the etymology of the word kume, which Moribe connects with kumi, "a company," and kuma, "a bravo," whereas in the opinion of the former it is probably nothing more nor less than an ancient mispronunciation of the Chinese word chun (軍) modern Japanese gun, "army," "troops."

⁷⁵⁵ The Auxiliary Numeral here used is that properly denoting human beings, not deities, futari (二人), instead of futa-hashira (二柱).

⁷⁵⁶ In Japanese ama no iha-yugi.

⁷⁵⁷ This is the generally received interpretation of the obscure original term kabu-tsuchi (or kabu-tsutsui) no tachi, the parallel term ishi-tsutsui being understood to mean "a mallet-headed sword made of stone." (Both names appear below in the Song at the end of Sect. XLVIII, Note 4). Moribe, however, in his "Idzu no Chi-waki," rejecting the opinion that any part of the swords were made of stone, explains kabu-tsutsui in the sense of "broad-tempered" and ishi-tsutsui in that of "hard-tempered."

⁷⁵⁸ For the bows and arrows here mentioned see XXXI. Note 5.

true deer-arrows, stood in his august van in respectful attendance. So His Heavenly-Great-Wondrous-Augustness ⁷⁵⁹ (is the ancestor of the Kume Lords) ⁷⁶⁰ Thereupon he said: "This place is opposite to the "land of Kara." ⁷⁶¹ One comes straight across to the august Cape of Kasasa; ⁷⁶² and it is a land whereon the morning sun shines straight, a land which the evening sun's sunlight illumines. So this place is an exceedingly good place." ⁷⁶³ Having thus spoken, he made stout the temple-pillars on the nethermost rock-bottom, and made high the cross-beams to the Plain of High Heaven, ⁷⁶⁴ and dwelt there.

⁷⁵⁹ Ohotomo no murazhi, a common "gentile name" down to historical times. Oho-tomo means "numerous companies" or "large tribe," in allusion, as Moribe supposes, to the force of which the personage here mentioned was the general.

⁷⁶⁰ Kume no atahe. Conf. Note 7.

⁷⁶¹ Or Kan according to the Sinico-Japanese reading. We might render it in English by Korea. The Chinese character is 韓.

⁷⁶² Etymology uncertain. An alternative form of this name, which is preserved in the "Chronicle," is Nagasa, which Hirata thinks may stand for Nagasaki.

⁷⁶³ This is the sense of the original Japanese text of this passage as literally as it can be rendered, and so the older editors understood it. Motowori however, though not daring actually to alter the characters, assumes that they are corrupt, and in his kane rendering gives us this instead: "Thereupon, passing searchingly through a bare-backed empty country, he arrived at the august cape of Kasasa, and said: 'This land is a land whereon the morning sun shines straight, etc.'" His evident reason for wishing to alter the reading is simply and solely to conceal p. 138 the fact that Korea is mentioned in a not unfriendly manner, in the traditional account of the divine age, i.e. long before the epoch of its so-called revelation and conquest by the Empress Jin-go (see Sect. XCVI to XCVIII). That the parallel passage of the "Chronicles" lends some sanction to his view is no excuse for so dishonest a treatment of the text he undertakes to commentate; for the "Records" and the "Chronicles" often differ greatly in the: accounts they have preserved. One of Motowori's arguments is that, as Kasasa is said to have been in the province of Hiuga, it could not have been opposite to Korea, seeing that Hiuga faces east and not west. He here forgets that a little later on in his own same Commentary (Vol. XVII, p. 86) he asserts that Hiuga in ancient times included the provinces of Ohosumi and Satsuma, the latter of which does face west.

⁷⁶⁴ I.e., he built himself a palace to dwell in (Conf. Sect. XXXII, Note 27).

SECTION XXXV.—THE DUCHESS OF SARU

So then he charged Her Augustness the Heavenly-Alarming-Female [saying]: "Do thou, who wast the one to make known this Great Deity Prince of Saruta who respectfully served as my august vanguard, ⁷⁶⁵ respectfully escort him [back]; and do thou likewise bear the august name of that Deity, and respectfully serve me." Wherefore the Duchesses of Saru bear the name of the Male Deity the Prince of Saruta, and the women are Duchesses of Saru. ⁷⁶⁶

⁷⁶⁵ See Sect. XXXIII from a little before Note 11 to Note 17.

⁷⁶⁶ Q.d., instead of the men being Dukes, as would be more natural. The title was confined to females (see Sect. XXXIII. Note 33).

SECTION XXXVI.—THE DEITY PRINCE OF SARUTA AT AZAKA

Now when this Deity Prince of Saruta dwelt at Azaka, ⁷⁶⁷ he went out fishing, and had his hand caught by a hirabu shell-fish, ⁷⁶⁸ and was drowned in the brine of the sea. So the name by which he was called when he sank to the bottom was the Bottom-Touching-August-Spirit; ⁷⁶⁹ the name by which he was called when the sea-water gurgled up was the Gurgling-up-August-Spirit; ⁷⁷⁰ the name by which he was called when the bubbles formed was the Bubble-Bursting-August-Spirit. ⁷⁷¹ Thereupon [Her Augustness the Heavenly-Alarming-Female], having escorted [back] the Deity Prince of Saruta, came back, ⁷⁷² and at once drove together all the things broad of fin and the things narrow of fin, ⁷⁷³ and asked them, saying: "Will ye respectfully serve the august son of the "Heavenly Deities?"—upon which all the fishes declared that they would respectfully serve him. Only the bèche-de-mer said nothing. Then Her Augustness the Heavenly-Alarming-Female spoke to the bèche-de-mer, saying: "Ah! this mouth is a mouth that gives no reply!"—and [with these words] slit the mouth with her stiletto. ⁷⁷⁴ So at the present day the bèche-de-mer has a slit mouth. Wherefore [from august reign to] august reign, when the offerings of the first-fruits of Shima ⁷⁷⁵ are presented [to the Emperor], a portion of them is granted to the Duchesses of Saru.

⁷⁶⁷ Etymology unknown.

⁷⁶⁸ What species was denoted by this ancient name is not clear; but one of Motowori's suggestion, to the effect that it may have been identical with the modern sarubo-yahi (a shell of a family Arcadæ, probably Arca subcrenata), the origin of whose name would thus be traced up to the mythological age, is at least ingenious.

⁷⁶⁹ Soko-daku-mi-tama.

⁷⁷⁰ Tsubu-tatsu-mi-tama.

⁷⁷¹ Aka-saku-mi-tama. Saku might be translated by "opening," "forming," etc. It is the same word as that used to express the blossoming of a flower.

⁷⁷² The characters rendered "came back" are 還到. Motowori and Hirata believe 還 to be put erroneously for 罷, which would give the sense of "arrived there," and would thus enable us to locate the episode of the fishes at Ise instead of in Hiuga, which would better suit the concluding clause of this Section narrating the participation of the Duchesses of Sara in the 'first-fruits of the province of Shims. If the word Shima however here means, not the province of that name, but simply "islands" in general, there is nothing to be gained by the pro-posed emendation, which has moreover no sanction from any text; and it may be added that no notice is to be found in any history of the custom here said to have existed.

⁷⁷³ I.e. all the fishes both great and small.

⁷⁷⁴ Literally, "small string-sword," supposed to have been so called from its having been carried inside the garments, attached to the under-belt.

⁷⁷⁵ The smallest of the Japanese provinces, situated to the East of Ise. The name signifies "island," and it is possible that it ought here to be taken in that sense as a common noun.

SECTION XXXVII.—THE CURSE OF THE DEITY GREAT-MOUNTAIN-POSSESSOR

Hereupon His Augustness Heaven's-Sun-Height-Prince-Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty met a beautiful person at the august cape of Kasasa, and asked her whose daughter she was. She replied, saying: "I am a daughter of the Deity-Great-Mountain-Possessor, ⁷⁷⁶ and my name is the Divine-Princess-of-Ata, ⁷⁷⁷ another name by which I am called being Princess-Blossoming-Brilliantly-Like-the-Flowers-of-the-Trees." ⁷⁷⁸ Again he asked: "Hast thou any brethren?" ⁷⁷⁹ She replied, saying: "There is my elder sister, Princess-Long-as-the-Rocks." ⁷⁸⁰ Then he charged her, [saying]: "Ego sum cupidus coiendi tecum. Tibi quomodo videtur?" She replied, saying: "I ⁷⁸¹ am not able to say. My father the Deity Great-Mountain-Possessor will say." So he sent a request [for her] to her father the Deity Great-Mountain-Possessor, who, greatly delighted, respectfully sent her off, joining to her her elder sister Princess Long-as-the-Rocks, and causing merchandise to be carried on tables holding an hundred. ⁷⁸² So then, owing to the elder sister being very hideous, [His Augustness Prince-Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty] was alarmed at the sight of her, and sent her back, only keeping the younger sister Princess-Blossoming-Brilliantly-Like-the-Flowers-of-the-Trees, whom he wedded for one night. Then the Deity-Great-Mountain-Possessor was covered with shame at Princess Long-as-the-Rocks being sent back, and sent a message [to His Augustness Prince-Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty], saying: "My reason for respectfully presenting both my daughters together was that, by sending Princess-Long-as-the-Rocks, the august offspring ⁷⁸³ of the Heavenly Deity, ⁷⁸⁴ though the snow ⁷⁸⁵ fall and the wind blow, might live eternally immovable like unto the enduring rocks, and again that by sending Princess-Blossoming-Brilliantly-Like-the-Flowers-of-the-Trees, [they] might live flourishingly like unto the flowering of the blossoms of the trees: to insure this, ⁷⁸⁶ I offered ⁷⁸⁷ them. But owing to thy thus sending ⁷⁷⁶ See Sect. VI. Note 17.

⁷⁷⁷ Kamu-ata-tsu-hime. Ata is a place in Satsuma.

⁷⁷⁸ Or "Tree." Ka-no-hama-saku-ya-hime. Perhaps (though there is no native authority for doing so) we might rather understand saku as a Causative in intention, though not in form, and render the name thus: "Princess-Causing-the-Flowers-of-the-Trees-to-Blossom." The tree alluded to is doubtless the cherry. This deity is now worshipped as the goddess of Mount Fuzhi (Fusiyama), and in common parlance the last member of the compound forming her name does not receive the nigori,—hime instead of bime. The syllable ya has no signification in this and similar names. It will be remembered that there was another sister named "Princess-Falling-like-the-Flowers-of-the-Trees. (See Sect. XX, Note 5).

⁷⁷⁹ Or perhaps, so written 兄弟, the original expression were here better rendered by "sisters."

⁷⁸⁰ I.e., as enduring as the rocks. The original name is Iha-naga-hime.

⁷⁸¹ The character used here and immediately below for the First Personal Pronoun is 僕 "servant."

⁷⁸² I.e., every kind of goods as a dowry for his daughters.

⁷⁸³ The usual word child (子) is employed in the text; but it here almost certainly has, as Motowori suggests, a more extended meaning, and signifies the posterity of the Sun-Goddess or of Prince-Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty generally, i.e. the Emperors of Japan. The vaguer term "offspring" is therefore nearer to the author's intention.

⁷⁸⁴ I.e., either of the Sun-Goddess or of Prince-Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty, There is no difference in the sense, whichever of these two deities we take the speaker to refer to. The Sun-Goddess was his ancestress, and he was ancestor of the Japanese Emperors.

⁷⁸⁵ Or "snow and rain," the reading being uncertain.

⁷⁸⁶ Or "having sworn this," or "pledged [myself to the accomplishment of] this."

⁷⁸⁷ The Chinese characters used are those properly denoting the presenting of tribute.

back ⁷⁸⁸ Princess Long-as-the-Rocks, and keeping only Princess-Blossoming-Brilliantly-Like-the-Flowers-of-the-Trees, the august offspring of the Heavenly Deity shall be but as frail ⁷⁸⁹ as the flowers of the trees. So it is for this reason that down to the present day the august lives of Their Augustnesses the Heavenly Sovereigns ⁷⁹⁰ are not long.

⁷⁸⁸ Motowori (proposes an emendation in this passage of 此令 to 爾今 which would not materially alter the sense.

⁷⁸⁹ The precise meaning of the syllables a-ma-hi-no-mi, here rendered by the words "but as frail" in accordance with Motowori's and Moribe's tentative interpretation, is extremely obscure. The parallel passage in the "Chronicles" is 木華之移落, i.e. "fading and falling like the flowers of the trees."

⁷⁹⁰ The characters rendered "Heavenly Sovereign" are 天皇, a common Japanese designation of the Emperor. It would, especially in the later volumes of this work where the expression is repeated on almost every page, be more convenient to translate by the single word "Emperor." But the commentators lay great stress on the high significance of the component portions of the title, which, they contend, was not borrowed from China, but was first used in Japan. It is first met with in Chinese history in the middle of the seventh century of our era, just early enough indeed for it to have been borrowed before the time of the compilation of these "Records." But as there was no difficulty in putting together the two component parts "Heavenly, Sovereign," it is possible that the contention of the Japanese commentators is correct. The ancient pure native term seems to have been Sumera-mikoto, for which Mr. Satow has proposed the rendering of "Sovereign Augustness."

SECTION XXXVIII.—THE AUGUST CHILD-BEARING OF PRINCESS-BLOSSOMING BRILLIANTLY-LIKE-THE-FLOWERS-OF-THE-TREES

So later on Princess-Blossoming-Brilliantly-Like-the-Flowers-of-the-Trees waited on ⁷⁹¹ [His Augustness Prince Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty, and said: "I ⁷⁹² am pregnant, and now the time for my delivery approaches. "It is not fit for me to be delivered of the august offspring of Heaven privately; ⁷⁹³ so I tell thee." Then [His Augustness Prince Rice-ear-Ruddy-Plenty] said: "Princess-Blossoming-Brilliantly! ⁷⁹⁴ what! pregnant after one night! ⁷⁹⁵ It cannot be my child. It must surely be the child of an Earthly Deity." ⁷⁹⁶ Then she replied, saying: "If the child with which I am pregnant be the child of an Earthly Deity, my delivery will not be fortunate. If it be the august child of the Heavenly Deity, ⁷⁹⁷ it will be fortunate;"—and thereupon she built a hall eight fathoms [long] without doors, ⁷⁹⁸ went inside the hall and plastered up [the entrance] with earth; and when the time came for her delivery, she set fire to the hall and was delivered. ⁷⁹⁹ So the name of the child that was born when the fire was burning most fiercely was His Augustness Fire-Shine ⁸⁰⁰ (this is the ancestor of the Hayabito, Dukes of Ata); ⁸⁰¹ the name of the child born next was His Augustness Fire-Climax; ⁸⁰² the august ⁸⁰³ name of the child born next was His Augustness Fire-Subside, ⁸⁰⁴ another ⁷⁹¹ More literally "came to"; but the character which is employed implies that her visit was to a superior.

⁷⁹² Written with the character 妾, a "concubine" or "handmaid," a common self-depreciatory equivalent of the First Personal Pronoun in Chinese, when the speaker is a woman.

⁷⁹³ I.e. "secretly," "without telling thee."

⁷⁹⁴ In this one instance only is the name thus abbreviated. Motowori supposes it to be on account of the scorn implied in the god's words

⁷⁹⁵ Literally, "one sojourn."

⁷⁹⁶ See Sect. I, Note 11. Here of course one of the gods of the same country-side is meant.

⁷⁹⁷ I.e. "thy child and the Sun-Goddess descendant."

⁷⁹⁸ That is to say that it remained doorless after she had, as stated immediately below, plastered up the entrance.

⁷⁹⁹ Viz. of child, not from the flames. There is no ambiguity in the Japanese expression.

⁸⁰⁰ Ho-deri-na-mikoto.

⁸⁰¹ Hayabito-ata-no-kimi. Ata is, as has been already stated in Note 2 to Sect. XXXVII, the name of a place in Satsuma. Haya-bito ("swift men," "bold men," literally, if we follow the Chinese characters "falcon men") was an ancient designation of the inhabitants of the south-western corner of Japan which was subsequently divided into the provinces of Satsuma and Ohosumi, and came by metonymy to be used to denote the province of Satsuma itself, for which reason it remained as the Pillow-Word for the word Satsuma even after the exclusive use of this latter name had been established. In after times the hayabito (also contracted to hayato and haito) were chiefly known as forming the Infantry of the Imperial Guard, a curious choice of provincials for which mythological sanction was invoked. They are also said to have furnished the performers of a symbolic dance mentioned at the end of Sect. XLI (see Note 3 to that Sect.) In later Sections of this work, the translator has ventured to render hayabito by "man-at-arms."

⁸⁰² Ho-suseri-no-mikoto.

⁸⁰³ The Honorific is doubtless prefixed in this case and not in the others, because it was to this prince or deity that the Imperial House traced its descent. Motowori's kana reading, which prefixes Honorifics to all such names indifferently, obliterates this delicate distinction.

⁸⁰⁴ Ho-wori-no-mikoto. The derivation of this name is less clear than that of his elder brothers. Motowori's proposal to consider it as a corruption of ho-yohari, "fire weakening," is however plausible; and as this triad of names is evidently intended to paint the stages in the progress of the conflagration, the import of the third must be something very like what Motowori suggests, even if his guess at the original form of the word be not quite correct. The names of all three brethren differ more or less in the parallel passage of the "Chronicles".

name for whom is His Augustness Heaven's-Sun-Height-Prince-Great-Rice-ears-Lord-Ears⁸⁰⁵ (three Deities in all).⁸⁰⁶

⁸⁰⁶ The actual word in the text is not kumi, "deity," but its Auxiliary Numeral hashira.

SECTION XXXIX.—THE AUGUST EXCHANGE OF LUCK

So His Augustness Fire-Shine was a prince who got his luck ⁸⁰⁷ on the sea, and caught things broad of fin and things narrow of fin. His Augustness Fire-Subside was a prince who got his luck on the mountains, and caught things rough of hair and things soft of hair. Then His Augustness Fire-Subside said to his elder brother His Augustness Fire-Shine: "Let us mutually exchange, and use each other's luck." [Nevertheless], though he thrice made the request, [his elder brother] would not accede [to it]; but at last with difficulty the mutual exchange was obtained. Then His Augustness Fire-Subside, undertaking the sea-luck, angled for fish, but never got a single fish; and moreover he lost the fish-hook in the sea. Thereupon his elder brother His Augustness Fire-Shine asked him for the fish-hook, saying: "A mountain-luck is a luck of its own, and a sea-luck is a luck of its own. Let each of us now restore [to the other] his luck." ⁸⁰⁸ To which the younger brother His Augustness Fire-Subside replied, saying: "As for thy fish-hook, I did not get a single fish by angling with it; and at last I lost it in the sea." But the elder brother required it of him [the more] urgently. So the younger brother, breaking his ten grasp sabre ⁸⁰⁹ that was augustly girded on him, made [of the fragments] five hundred fish-hooks as compensation; but he would not take them. Again he made a thousand fish-hooks as compensation; but he would not receive them, saying: "I still want the real original fish-hook."

⁸⁰⁷ For the archaic Japanese work sachi, here rendered "luck," there is no satisfactory English equivalent. Its original and most usual signification is "luck," "happiness; "then that which a man is lucky in or skilful at,—his "forte;" and finally that which he procures by his luck or skill and the implements which he uses in procuring it. The exchange negotiated below was doubtless that of the bow and arrows of one deity for the other deity's fish-hook.

⁸⁰⁸ I.e., "Some men are naturally good hunters, and others naturally good fishermen. Let us therefore restore to each other the implements necessary to the successful following of our respective avocations."—The clause rendered "Let each of us now restore to the other his luck "is a little confused in the original; but the kana readings both old and new agree in interpreting it as has here been done.

⁸⁰⁹ See Sect. VIII, Note 1.

SECTION XL.—THE PALACE OF THE OCEAN-POSSESSOR

Hereupon, as the younger brother was weeping and lamenting by the sea-shore, the Deity Salt-Possessor ⁸¹⁰ came and asked him, saying: "What is the cause of the Sky's-Sun-Height's ⁸¹¹ weeping and lamentation?" He replied, saying: "I had exchanged a fish-hook with my elder brother, ⁸¹² and have lost that fish-hook; and as he asks me for it, I have given him many fish-hooks as compensation; but he will not receive them, saying, 'I still want the original fish-hook.' So I weep and lament for this." Then the Deity Salt-Possessor said: "I will give good counsel to Thine Augustness;"—and there-with built a stout little boat without interstices, ⁸¹³ and set him in the boat, and instructed him, saying: "When I shall have pushed the boat off, go on for some time. There will be a savoury august road; ⁸¹⁴ and if thou goest in the boat along that road, there will appear a palace built like fishes' scales,—which is the palace of the Deity, Ocean-Possessor. ⁸¹⁵ When thou reachest the august gate of that deity['s palace], there will be a multitudinous[-ly branching] cassia-tree ⁸¹⁶ above the well at its side. So if thou sit on the top of that tree, the Sea-Deity's daughter will see thee, and counsel thee." So following [these] instructions, [His Augustness Fire-Subside] went a little [way], and everything happened as [the Deity Salt-Possessor] had said; and he forthwith climbed the cassia-tree, and sat [there]. Then when the hand-maidens of the Sea-Deity's daughter Luxuriant-Jewel-Princess, ⁸¹⁷ bearing jewelled vessels, were about to draw water, there was a light in the well. ⁸¹⁸ On looking up, there was a beautiful young man.

⁸¹⁰ Shiho-tsuchi no kami. The view of the meaning of this name which has here been taken is founded on the persistent use in all documents of the character 鹽, "salt," to write the first element of the compound, and of varying characters to write the syllables tsu and chi, an indication that the latter are to be taken phonetically and may therefore be interpreted to signify tsu mochi, "possessor of," as in numerous other instances. The fact that this god is known as the god of salt-manufacturers (see Tanigaha Shinsei's "Perpetual Commentary on the Chronicles of Japan" Vol. VII, p. 3) adds another reason for rejecting both Motowori's far-fetched derivation of the name for Shiri-oho-tsu-mochi, "Great Possessor of Knowledge," and his assertion that it denotes no individual deity, but any one gifted with superior wisdom.

⁸¹² I.e., "I had received a fish-hook from my elder brother in exchange for a bow." The text is here concise to obscurity.

⁸¹³ I.e., as is supposed, a punt or tub made of strips of bamboo plaited so tightly that no water could find its way in between them.

⁸¹⁴ I.e., simply "a pleasant road." Michi, "a road" is properly a compound,—mi-chi, "august road,"—the single syllable chi being the most archaic Japanese word for "road." It is in this place written 御路, showing that the etymology was not yet quite forgotten at the time of the compilation of these "Records." Generally, however, throughout the work we have 路 or 々 alone.

⁸¹⁵ See Sect. VI, Note 8, where the Adjective "Great" is prefixed to the name.

⁸¹⁶ See Sect. XXXI, Note 10.

⁸¹⁷ Toyo-tama-hime.

⁸¹⁸ The character 光 properly "light," "refulgence," is here taken by Motowori in the precisely opposite sense of "shadow" (the parallel p. 152 passage in the "Chronicles" having 人影 "human shadow"), and his view is absolved from unreasonableness by the fact of the confusion between light and shade which has always

They thought it very strange. Then His Augustness Fire-Subside saw the handmaidens, and begged to be given some water. The handmaidens at once drew some water, put it into a jewelled vessel, and respectfully presented it to him. Then, without drinking the water, he loosened the jewel at his august neck, took it in his mouth, and spat it into the jewelled vessel. Thereupon the jewel adhered to the vessel, and the handmaidens could not separate the jewel [from the vessel]. So they took it with the jewel adhering to it, and presented it to Her Augustness Luxuriant-Jewel-Princess. Then, seeing the jewel, she asked her hand-maidens, saying: "Is there perhaps some one outside the gate?" They replied, saying: "There is some one sitting on the top of the cassia-tree above our well. It is a very beautiful young man. He is more illustrious even than our king. Lo, as he begged for water, we respectfully gave him water; but, without drinking the water, he spat this jewel into [the vessel]. As we were not able to separate this [from the other], ⁸¹⁹ we have brought [the vessel] with [the jewel] in it to present to thee." Then Her Augustness Luxuriant-Jewel-Princess, thinking it strange, went out to look, and was forthwith delighted at the sight. They exchanged glances, after which she spoke to her father, saying: "There is a beautiful person at our gate." Then the Sea-Deity him-self went out to look, and saying: "This person is the Sky's-Sun-Height, the august child of the Heaven's-Sun-Height," ⁸²⁰ led him into the interior [of the palace], and spreading eight layers of rugs of sea-asses ⁸²¹ skins, and spreading on the top other eight layers of silk rugs, and setting him on the top of them, arranged merchandise on tables holding an hundred, ⁸²² made an august banquet, and forthwith gave him his daughter Luxuriant-Jewel-Princess in marriage. So he dwelt in that land for three years. Hereupon His Augustness Fire-Subside thought of what had gone before, ⁸²³ and heaved one ⁸²⁴ deep sigh. So Her Augustness Luxuriant-Jewel-Princess, hearing the sigh, informed her father, saying: "Though he has dwelt three years [with us], he had never sighed; but this night he heaved one deep sigh. What may be the cause of it?" The Great Deity her father asked his son-in-law saying: "This morning I heard my daughter speak, saying: 'Though he has dwelt three years [with us], he had never sighed; but this night he heaved one deep sigh.' What may the cause be? Moreover what was the cause of thy coming here?" Then [His Augustness Fire-Subside] told the Great Deity exactly how his elder brother had pressed him for the lost fish-hook. Thereupon the Sea-Deity summoned together all the fishes of the sea, great and small, and asked them, saying: "Is there perchance any fish existed in Japanese phraseology. Thus hi-kage may signify either "sunlight" or "a shadow cast by the sun." It is safest, however, to adhere to the Chinese characters employed by the author; and in this special instance we may well suppose him to have intended to say that a celestial light shone from the body of the god in question. Such an idea is not foreign to classical Japanese ways of thought and expression. See also Sect. XLVI, Note 9-10.

⁸¹⁹ Or, taking the character 是 as an initial Particle, "So, as we were not able to separate [one from the other]."

⁸²⁰ See Note 2 to this Section.

⁸²¹ This is a literal translation of the Chinese characters 海驢, by which the Archaic word michi, here written phonetically, is elsewhere represented. Perhaps the sea-lion (Otaria arctica) or a species of seal may be intended.

⁸²² See Sect. XXXVII, Note 7.

⁸²³ Literally, "thought of the first things."

⁸²⁴ As the character for "one" is thrice repeated in this passage, Motowori is probably right in saying that it should be given its proper signification, and the translator therefore renders it by the Numeral "one" rather than by the Indefinite Article "a."

that has taken this fish-hook?" So all the fishes replied: "Lately the tahi ⁸²⁵ has complained of something sticking in its throat ⁸²⁶ preventing it from eating; so it doubtless has taken [the hook]." On the throat of the tahi being thereupon examined, there was the fish-hook [in it]. Being forthwith taken, it was washed and respectfully presented to His Augustness Fire-Subside, whom the Deity Great-Ocean-Possessor then instructed, saying: "What thou shalt say when thou grantest this fish-hook to thine elder brother [is as follows]: 'This fish-hook is a big hook, an eager hook, a poor hook, a silly hook.' ⁸²⁷ Having [thus] spoken, bestow it with thy back hand. ⁸²⁸ Having done thus,—if thine elder brother make high fields, ⁸²⁹ do Thine Augustness make low fields; and if thine elder brother make low fields, do Thine Augustness make high fields. If thou do thus, thine elder brother will certainly be impoverished in the space of three years, owing to my ruling the water. If thine elder brother, incensed at thy doing thus, should attack thee, put forth the tide-flowing jewel ⁸³⁰ to drown him. If he express grief, put forth the tide-ebbing jewel to let him live. Thus shalt thou harass him." With these words, [the Sea-Deity] gave [to His Augustness Fire-Subside] the tide-flowing jewel and the tide-ebbing jewel,—two in all,—and forthwith summoned together all the crocodiles, ⁸³¹ and asked them, saying: "The Sky's-Sun-Height, august child of the Heaven's-Sun-Height, is now about to proceed out to the Upper-Land. ⁸³² Who will in how many days respectfully escort him, and bring back a report?" ⁸³³ So each according to the length of his body in fathoms spoke, fixing [a certain number of] days,—one of them, a crocodile one fathom [long], saying: "I ⁸³⁴ will escort him, and come back in one day." So then [the Sea-Deity] said to the crocodile one fathom [long]: "If that be so, do thou respectfully escort him. While crossing the middle of the sea, do not alarm

⁸²⁵ Pronounced tai in modern parlance. Perhaps we should rather add aka-dahi, "red tahi," as in the parallel passage of the "Chronicles." Both these fishes belong to the family Sparoidei, the former being the Pagrus cardinalis, the latter probably the P. major.

⁸²⁶ Or, "of a fish-bone in its throat."

⁸²⁷ Tanigaha Shisei, quoting from Urabe no Kaneyoshi, comments thus on the parallel passage in the "Chronicles," where the whole of this legend is given several times in slightly varying forms: "By big hook is meant one that will not serve its purpose [because too big]; eager signifies that which [endeavours to, but] cannot advance; silly means unintelligent; hence we have a hook which, not serving its purpose, will be of no use whatever, but rather a road to lead [him who possesses it] to poverty. Poor outwardly, and inwardly silly, he will be the most useless creature in the Empire." It should be noted, however, that Motowori interprets in the sense of "gloomy," and Moribe in the sense of "drowning," the phonetically written and obscure word obo, here rendered "great."

⁸²⁸ I.e., "with thy hand behind thy back." This is supposed by the commentators to have been a sort of charm by which evil was averted from the person of him who practised it, and they point out that Izanagi (the "Male-Who-Invites") brandished his sword behind him when he was pursued by the hosts of Hades (see Sect. IX, Note 15).

⁸²⁹ By "high fields" and "low fields" are meant respective upland rice-fields where the rice is planted in the dry, and "paddy-fields" properly so called, where the rice perpetually stands in the water. Different varieties of rice are used for these different methods of culture.

⁸³⁰ Shiho mitsu tama. The "tide-ebbing jewel" mentioned in the next sentence is in the Japanese shihō hiru tama.

⁸³¹ See Introduction, p. xxxiii, Note 41.

⁸³² Uha tsu kuni, 國上.

⁸³³ I.e., "Which of you will most speedily escort him home to the upper world, and bring back news of his safe arrival there?"

⁸³⁴ Written with the respectful 僕, "servant."

him!" ⁸³⁵ Forthwith he seated him upon the crocodile's head, and saw him off. So [the crocodile] respectfully escorted him home in one day, as he had promised. When the crocodile was about to return, [His Augustness Fire-Subside] untied the stiletto ⁸³⁶ which was girded on him, and, setting it on the crocodile's neck, ⁸³⁷ sent [the latter] back. So the crocodile one fathom [long] is now called the Deity Blade-Possessor. ⁸³⁸ ⁸³⁵ There is in, this sentence a character 若, which is hard to explain if read moshi, "if," as usual in Japanese.

Probably, however, it simply stands for 汝 "thou," and we might translate thus: "While thou art crossing," etc.

⁸³⁶ See Sect. XXXVI, Note 8.

⁸³⁷ I.e., probably, tying it round the crocodile's neck.

⁸³⁸ Saki-mochi-no-kami. "Blade "is the probable signification of sahi or sabi, though this particular proper name is written in the "Chronicles" with the Chinese character 鋤, "hoe" or "mattock." Here the syllables sa hi are written phonetically.

SECTION XLI.—SUBMISSION OF HIS AUGUSTNESS FIRE-SHINE

Hereupon [His Augustness Fire-Subside] gave the fish-hook [to his elder brother], exactly according to the Sea-Deity's words of instruction. So thenceforward [the elder brother] became poorer, and poorer, and, with renewed savage intentions, came to attack him. When he was about to attack [His Augustness Fire-Subside, the latter] put forth the tide-flowing jewel to drown him; on his expressing grief, he put forth the tide-ebbing jewel to save him. When he had thus been harassed, he bowed his head,⁸³⁹ saying: "I⁸⁴⁰ henceforward will be Thine Augustness's guard by day and night, and respectfully serve thee." So down to the present day his various posturings when drowning are ceaselessly served up.⁸⁴¹

⁸³⁹ i.e., "did humble obeisance by prostrating himself on the ground." The Old Printed Edition has 稽白 instead 稽首白, and the kana glosskamugahemausu, i.e. "reflected, and said": but this reading, though interesting, is less good.

⁸⁴⁰ Written with the humble character 僕, "servant."

⁸⁴¹ i.e., "Prince Fire-Shine's descendants the Hayabito (see Sect. XXXVIII, Note 11) still constantly perform before the Court dances and posturings symbolical of the antics which their divine ancestor went through for the amusement of his younger brother, after the latter had saved him from drowning. "One account" in the "Chronicles" relates these antics at full, telling us that they represented the straits to which he was put as the waters gradually rose higher and higher; and we learn from other passages in the same work and in the "Chronicles of Japan Continued" that the Hayabito did really down to historical times combine the office of Court Jesters with that of Imperial Guardsmen.

SECTION XLII.—THE PARTURITION-HOUSE OF CORMORANTS' FEATHERS

Hereupon the Sea-Deity's daughter Her Augustness Luxuriant-Jewel-Princess herself waited on ⁸⁴² [His Augustness Fire-Subside], and said: "I ⁸⁴³ am already with child, and the time for my delivery now approaches. But me-thought that the august child of an Heavenly Deity ⁸⁴⁴ ought not to be born in the Sea-Plain. ⁸⁴⁵ So I have waited on thee here." ⁸⁴⁶ Then forthwith on the limit of the waves upon the sea-shore she built a parturition-hall, ⁸⁴⁷ using cormorants' feathers for thatch. Hereupon, before the thatch was completed, ⁸⁴⁸ she was unable to restrain the urgency of her august womb. So she entered the parturition-hall. Then, when she was about to be delivered, she spoke to her husband ⁸⁴⁹ [saying]: "Whenever a foreigner is about to be delivered, she takes the shape of her native land to be delivered. ⁸⁵⁰ So I now will take my native shape to be delivered. Pray look not upon me!" Hereupon [His Augustness Fire-Subside], thinking these words strange, stealthily peeped at the very moment of delivery, when she turned into a crocodile ⁸⁵¹ eight fathoms [long], and crawled and writhed about; and he forthwith, terrified at the sight, fled away. Then Her Augustness Luxuriant-Jewel-Princess knew that he had peeped; and she felt ashamed, and, straightway leaving the august child which she had borne, she said: 'I had wished always to come and go across the sea-path. ⁸⁵² But thy having peeped at my [real] shape [makes me] very shame-faced," ⁸⁵³—and she forthwith closed the sea-boundary, ⁸⁵⁴ and went down ⁸⁴² For "waited on" see Sect. XXXVIII, Note 1. The word "herself" (自 midzukara) has no particular force or meaning in the Japanese original, where it is simply placed in imitation of the Chinese style.

⁸⁴³ See Sect. XXXVIII, Note 2.

⁸⁴⁴ Or "of the Heavenly Deity," i.e., "thyself." But it seems better to understand the speaker to intimate that it would be unfitting for one who properly belonged to Heaven to be born in the sea, which was another country or kingdom.

⁸⁴⁵ i.e., in the sea.

⁸⁴⁶ Literally "come out and arrived."

⁸⁴⁷ It has been noticed in the Introduction, p. xxviii, that in early Japan a parturient woman was expected to build for herself a special hut in which to give birth to her child.

⁸⁴⁸ Or, completely put on; literally, "thatched [so as] to meet."

⁸⁴⁹ The text here has 日子 "prince," literally "sun-child," and so the older editors understood the expression.

The translator, however, prefers Motowori's view, according to which the character 遅 should be supplied, and the whole read phonetically as hikoi, "husband," a word which occurs again a few lines further on.

⁸⁵⁰ i.e., she assumes the shape proper to her in her native land.

⁸⁵¹ According to the parallel passage of the "Chronicles," she turned into a dragon. "One account "however agrees with our text.

⁸⁵² The original of this passage is rather confused; but the interpretation here adopted from the Old Printed Edition is more natural than Motowori's according to which the Verbs are to be taken in a Causative sense, to the following effect: "I had always wished to let people come and go across the sea-path." Probably it was only in order to make this clause fit in better with the following sentence, in which we are told that the crocodile-princess "closed the sea-boundary," and with the fact that there is at present no path leading to the Sea-God's palace, that Motowori was induced to sanction such a view of the grammar of this passage.

⁸⁵³ This is Motowori's interpretation of the clause, he having emended 作, "action," "doing," which is found in the older editions, 作, "shame-faced." (The edition of 1687 mentions 怪, "strange," as an alternative reading). If we followed the older reading, we should have to translate thus: "Thy having peeped at my [real] shape is an outrageous action."

⁸⁵⁴ i.e., the boundary dividing the dominions of the Sea-God from the world of men.

again.⁸⁵⁵ Therefore the name by which the august child whom she had borne was called was his Augustness Heaven's-Sun-Height-Prince-Wave-limit-Brave-Cormorant-Thatch-Meeting-Incompletely.⁸⁵⁶ Nevertheless afterwards, although angry at his having wished to peep, she could not restrain her loving heart, and she entrusted to her younger sister Jewel-Good-Princess,⁸⁵⁷ on the occasion of her nursing the august child,⁸⁵⁸ a Song to be presented [to His Augustness Fire-Subside]. The Song said:

"As for red jewels, though even the string [they are strung on] shines, the aspect of [my] lord [who is] like unto white jewels is [more] illustrious."⁸⁵⁹

Then her husband replied by a Song, which said:

"As for my younger sister, whom I took to sleep [with me] on the island where light the wild-duck, the birds of the offing, I shall not forget her till the end of my life."⁸⁶⁰

So His Augustness-Prince-Great-Rice-ears-Lord-Ears⁸⁶¹ dwelt in the palace of Takachiho for five hundred and eighty years⁸⁶² His august mausoleum⁸⁶³ is likewise on the west of Mount Takachiho.

⁸⁵⁵ Viz., to the Sea-God's palace.

⁸⁵⁶ Ama-tsu-hi-daka-hiko-nagisa-take-u-gaya-fuki-ahesu no mikoto. The older editors read ahasezu for ahezu, i.e. "causing to meet," instead of "meeting." Moribe, in his Critique on Motowori's Commentary, would have us believe that the name comes from umi-ga kayohi fuki- ahezu (海陸往來乳養不得), i.e. "going and coming on sea and land and being unable to suckle"!

⁸⁵⁷ Tama yori-bime.

⁸⁵⁸ I.e., of Jewel-Good-Princess nursing the child, The mother did not return to the upper world, and so sent this poetic message by her sister, who had consented to act as the child's nurse.

⁸⁵⁹ "The meaning of the Song," says Motowori, "is this: Although red jewels are so charming that the very string [whereon they are strung] doth shine, the august aspect of my lord, who is like unto white jewels, is still more lovely. Thus does she express her loving feeling."—Moribe supposed the "red jewels" (or "jewel" in the Singular) to be meant for the child, than whom her husband is yet dearer to her heart. The word kimi, here etymologically rendered "[my] lord," is commonly used in the sense of "thou," especially in poetry.

⁸⁶⁰ I.e., "I shall never forget thee who wast my wife in the realm of the Sea-God. The "birds of the offing" are a description of the wild duck, used as a Pillow-Word for their name. In the same manner the whole phrase, "where light the wild-duck, the birds of the offing," may be taken simply as a "Preface" to the word "island." The Sea-God's dwelling is called an island because it is beyond the sea. The words yo no koto-goto ni, here in deference to the views of the best commentators rendered by "till the end of my life," will also bear the interpretation of "night by night."

⁸⁶¹ The alternative name of the deity Fire-Subside.

⁸⁶² Probably the writer means us to understand that the total age reached by this deity was five hundred and eighty years. This is the first mention in these "Records" of anything approaching a date. The way in which it is recorded resembles that in which the chronicle of each Emperor's reign is brought to a close in the later volumes of the work.

⁸⁶³ The character 陵 might also be rendered by the simple word "grave." But neither it nor its Japanese reading misasaki are ever used except honorifically of the Imperial tombs, and "mausoleum" seems therefore a more suitable English equivalent.

SECTION XLIII.—THE AUGUST CHILDREN OF HIS AUGUSTNESS CORMORANT-THATCH-MEETING- INCOMPLETELY

His Augustness Heaven's-Sun-Height-Prince-Wave-limit-Brave-Cormorant-Thatch-Meeting-Incompletely wedded his maternal aunt Her Augustness Jewel-Good-Princess, and begot august children named: His Augustness Five-Reaches; ⁸⁶⁴ next His Augustness Boiled-Rice; ⁸⁶⁵ next His Augustness August-Food-Master; ⁸⁶⁶ next His Augustness Young-August-Food-Master, ⁸⁶⁷ another name for whom is His Augustness Luxuriant-August-Food-Master, ⁸⁶⁸ and another name is His Augustness Divine-Yamato-Ihare-Prince. ⁸⁶⁹ So His Augustness August-Food-Master, treading on the crest of the waves, crossed over to the Eternal Land. ⁸⁷⁰ His Augustness Boiled-Rice went into the Sea-Plain, it being his deceased mother's ⁸⁷¹ land.

⁸⁶⁴ Itsu-se-no-mikoto. The "reaches" are the reaches of a river: at least this seems the most natural view to take of the meaning of the name. Motowori and Moribe, however, consider it to be a corruption of idzu-shine, to which they assign the signification of "powerful rice." Excepting for the fact of its bringing this name into harmony with the three that follow, and which all relate to food, there seems little to recommend so far-fetched a derivation.

⁸⁶⁵ Inu-hi-na-mikoto. If Motowori's derivation of the name from ina-ih is correct, it might be rendered with greater exactness "Rice-boiled-rice," ine denoting rice in the husk and ih the same when boiled.

⁸⁶⁶ Mi-ke-nu-no-mikoto. This name has been translated in accordance with Motowori's interpretation of the syllables that compose it.

⁸⁶⁷ Waka-nu-ke-nu-no-mikoto. Conf. preceding Note.

⁸⁶⁸ Toyo-nu-ke-nu-no-mikoto. Conf. Note 3.

⁸⁶⁹ Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko-no-mikoto. Yamato being the name of the province where this prince, the first Emperor of the so-called "human age," fixed his capital, it appropriately forms part of his name. For a discussion of the etymology of the word Yamato, see Sect. V, Note 26. Ihare, a word which is said to signify "assembling," is the name of a village in that province.

⁸⁷⁰ See Sect. XXVII, Note 12.

⁸⁷¹ See Sect. XII, Note 8.

VOLUME II ⁸⁷²SECTION XLIV.—REIGN OF THE EMPEROR JIM-MU⁸⁷³
(PART I.—HIS PROGRESS EASTWARD, AND DEATH OF HIS ELDER BROTHER)

The two Deities His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko⁸⁷⁴ and his elder brother His Augustness Itsu-se, dwelling in the palace of Takachiho.⁸⁷⁵ took counsel, saying: "By dwelling in what place shall we [most] quietly carry on the government of the Empire?⁸⁷⁶ It were probably best to go east." Forthwith they left Himuka⁸⁷⁷ on their progress⁸⁷⁸ to Tsukushi.⁸⁷⁹ So when they arrived at Usa⁸⁸⁰ in the Land of Toyo,⁸⁸¹ two of the natives, whose names were Usa-tsu-hiko and Usa-tsu-hime⁸⁸² built a palace raised on one foot,⁸⁸³ and offered them a great august banquet. Removing thence, they dwelt for one year at the palace of Wokoda⁸⁸⁴ in Tsukushi. Again making a progress up⁸⁸⁵ from that land, they dwelt seven years at the palace of Takeri⁸⁸⁶ in the land of Agi.⁸⁸⁷ Again removing, and making a progress up from that land, they dwelt eight years at the palace of Takashima⁸⁸⁸ in Kibi.⁸⁸⁹ So when they made their progress up from that land, they met in the Hayasuhi⁸⁹⁰ Channel a person riding towards them on the carapace of a tortoise, and raising his wings⁸⁹¹ as he angled. Then they called to him to approach, and asked him, saying: "Who art thou?" He replied, saying: "I⁸⁹² am an ⁸⁷² Literally, "Middle Volume," there being three in all. See Author's Preface, Note 1.

⁸⁷³ Jim-mu signifies "divine valour." It is the "canonical name" of the Emperor Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko (see Introduction, p. xiv).

⁸⁷⁴ In the preceding Section this name was rendered "Divine-Yamato-Ihare-Prince." But in the translation of Vols. II and III of this work, the Japanese proper names are not Englished, unless there be a special reason for so doing. (See Introduction, pp. xviii and xix.)

⁸⁷⁵ See Sect. XXXIV, Note 5.

⁸⁷⁶ See Sect. XXVII, Note 13.

⁸⁷⁷ See Sect. X, Note 4.

⁸⁷⁸ The Japanese expression here used is one which exclusively denotes an Imperial Progress, and not the movements of lesser people. It recurs perpetually in this and the following Volume.

⁸⁷⁹ See Sect. V, Note 14.

⁸⁸⁰ Etymology uncertain.

⁸⁸¹ See Sect. V, Note 17.

⁸⁸² I.e., Prince of Usa and Princess of Usa.

⁸⁸³ In the original, 足一騰宮, read asks hito-tsu agari no miya. The parallel passage of the "Chronicles" has 一柱騰宮 which is directed to be read in the same manner. 柱 (hashira) however means, not "foot," but "pillar"; and the commentators understand both passages to allude to a single pillar, which supported the weight of the entire building,—either as being in the middle of it, or (as Motowori opines) by standing in the water, the edifice, according to this view, being built on a river-bank overhanging the stream.

⁸⁸⁴ This name signifies "hillock rice-field."

⁸⁸⁵ Q.d. towards Yamato, the province where the capital was eventually fixed. In Japanese, as in English, people are said to go of to the capital and down to the country.

⁸⁸⁶ Etymology uncertain.

⁸⁸⁷ Etymology uncertain. This name is better known (without the nigori of the second syllable) as Aki. Aki is one of the provinces on the northern shore of the Inland Sea.

⁸⁸⁸ This name signifies "high island."

⁸⁸⁹ Etymology uncertain. Kibi is the name of a province.

⁸⁹⁰ This name signifies "quick sucking."

⁸⁹¹ I.e., as Motowori supposes, beckoning by waving his sleeve.

⁸⁹² The First Personal Pronoun is represented by the humble character 僕, "servant."

Earthly Deity.⁸⁹³ Again they asked him, saying: "Knowest thou the sea-path?" He replied, saying: "I know it well." Again they asked him, saying: "Wilt thou follow and respectfully serve us?" He replied, saying: "I will respectfully serve you." So they pushed a pole⁸⁹⁴ across to him, drew him into the august vessel, and forthwith conferred on him the designation of Sawa-ne-tsu-hiko⁸⁹⁵ (This is the ancestor of the Rulers of the land of Yamato.)⁸⁹⁶ So when they went up from that land they passed the Nami-haya⁸⁹⁷ Crossing, and brought up at the haven of Shirakata.⁸⁹⁸ At this time Nagasune-biko⁸⁹⁹ of Tomi⁹⁰⁰ raised an army, and waited to go out to fight [against them]. Then they took the shields that had been put in the august vessel, and disembarked. So they called that place by the name of Tate-dzu.⁹⁰¹ It is what is now called the Tadetsu of Kusaka.⁹⁰² Therefore when fighting with the Prince of Tomi,⁹⁰³ His Augustness Itsu-se was pierced in his august hand by the Prince of Tomi's hurtful arrow.⁹⁰⁴ So then he said: "It is not right for me, an august child of the Sun-Deity, to fight facing the sun. It is for this reason that I am stricken by the wretched villain's⁹⁰⁵ hurtful hand. I will henceforward turn round, and smite him with my back to

⁸⁹⁴ The characters 槁機 are evidently, as Motowori says, meant to represent the Japanese word sawo, "pole," though they do not properly convey that meaning. Probably they are corrupt.

⁸⁹⁵ i.e., if we suppress the syllable ne, which seems to be either Expletive or Honorific, the "prince of the pole."

⁸⁹⁶ Yamato no kuni no Miyadzuko.

⁸⁹⁷ This is the reading of the name preferred by Mabuchi and Motowori; but the usual form Naniha seems to be at least as well supported by early documentary evidence. The "Chronicles" tell us that the place was called Nani-haya 浪速, i.e. "wave swift," in allusion to the strong current which the Emperor Jim-mu here encountered; and at the present day it is still a dangerous place for navigation. The name properly denotes the water at the mouth of the River Yodo, on which stands the modern town of Ohosaka (Ōzaka), for whose name Naniha is still often used as a poetical synonym. 浪花, "wave flowers," and 難浪, "dangerous waves," are alternative ways of writing it.

⁸⁹⁸ Motowori says that he cannot explain the etymology of this word; but "white sandbank" would seem a simple and obvious derivation. The Shirakata here mentioned is, according to Motowori, that situated in the province of Idzumo.

⁸⁹⁹ i.e., the Prince of Nagasune. A plausible interpretation of nagasune would be "long-shank," which would give us Prince Long-Shank as the name of the worthy here mentioned; but the "Chronicles" states that Nagasune was properly the name of a place. The characters with which it is written, moreover, signify not exactly "long shank," but "long marrow," a designation which would have no evident personal applicability.

⁹⁰⁰ A legend in the "Chronicles" connects the name of this place with the word tobi, "a kite," it being there related that a miraculous gold-coloured kite came and perched on the Emperor Jim-mu's bow, and helped him to the victory. Probably the legend grew out of the name of Tobi, which is obscure and may have had had nothing to do with a "kite" originally.

⁹⁰¹ i.e., "shield-haven." But conf. next Note.

⁹⁰² The real etymology of Tada-tsu seems to be "knot-grass-haven," and probably Taka-tsu (for Takatsu), which is mentioned in Sect. LXIX, Note 29, is but another form of the same name. Kusaka is a well-known name in the annals of early Japan. Its signification is obscure, and the characters (日下), with which it is written, are particularly curious. There were two Kusaka, one in the province of Kahachi and the other in Idzumi.

⁹⁰³ Viz., Nagasune-biko.

⁹⁰⁴ The wording of the original 負登美毗古之痛矢串 is very curious: Motowori reads it Tomi-bike ga ita-ya wo ohashite. Immediately below we have 負賤奴之痛手.

⁹⁰⁵ The character is 奴, properly "slave."

the sun." Having [thus] decided, he, on making a progress round from the southern side, reached the sea of Chinu, ⁹⁰⁶ and washed the blood on his august hand: so it is called the sea of Chinu. ⁹⁰⁷ Making a progress round from thence, and arriving at the river-mouth of Wo ⁹⁰⁸ in the land of Ki, ⁹⁰⁹ he said: "Ah! that I should die stricken by the wretched villain's hand!" and expired ⁹¹⁰ as a valiant man. ⁹¹¹ So that river-mouth was called the river mouth of Wo. ⁹¹² The Mausoleum, too, is on Mount Kama ⁹¹³ in the land of Ki.

⁹⁰⁶ The most likely derivation of this name is from chi-numa, "eulalia lagoon," the fact that it will also bear the interpretation of "blood-lagoon" being probably but a coincidence of which the mythopoeic faculty took advantage.

⁹⁰⁷ Here written with characters signifying "blood-lagoon."

⁹⁰⁸ The characters rendered "river-mouth" are 水門, literally "water. gate; but here, as elsewhere, "river-mouth" seems to be the signification meant to be conveyed. Rivers in Japan, even at the present day, do not bear one continuous name along their entire course, and there would be nothing unnatural in the fact of the water at the mouth of the river having a special designation. One of the significations of wo is "man," and the legendary etymology of the name given immediately below rests on the assumption that such is the meaning of wo in this place. Even Motowori, however, is not satisfied with it, and it is probably erroneous.

⁹⁰⁹ See Sect. XXII, Note 14.

⁹¹⁰ The Chinese character 崩, which is here used, is one that specially denotes the demise of an Emperor.

⁹¹¹ Probably the sense meant to be conveyed is that he expired with a gesture of anger and defiance.

⁹¹² Here written 男, "man." Conf. Note 37.

⁹¹³ Kama-yama, i.e. furnace-mountain."

SECTION XLV.—EMPEROR JIM-MU (PART II.—THE CROSS-SWORD SENT DOWN FROM HEAVEN)

So when His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko made a progress round from thence, and reached the village of Kumanu, ⁹¹⁴ a large bear came out of the mountain, ⁹¹⁵ and forthwith disappeared into it. Then His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko suddenly fainted away, and his august army likewise all fainted and fell prostrate. At this time Takakurazhi ⁹¹⁶ (this is the name of a person) ⁹¹⁷ of Kumanu came bearing one cross-sword ⁹¹⁸ to the place where the august-child of the Deity was lying prostrate, and presented it to him, upon which the august child of the Heavenly Deity forthwith rose up, and said: "How long I have slept!" So when he accepted the cross-sword, the savage Deities of the mountains of Kumanu all spontaneously fell cut down. ⁹¹⁹ Then the whole august army, that had been bewildered and had fallen prostrate, awoke and rose up. So the august child of the Heavenly Deity asked him how he had got the cross-sword. Takakurazhi replied, saying: "I was told in a dream that the two Deities the Heaven-Shining-Great-Deity ⁹²⁰ and the High Integrating Deity ⁹²¹ commanded and summoned the Brave-Awful-Possessing-Male-Deity, ⁹²² and charged him [thus]: 'The Central Land of Reed-Plains ⁹²³ is painfully uproarious,—it is. ⁹²⁴ Our august children must be ill at ease. As [therefore] the Central Land of Reed-Plains is a land which thou specially subduedst, thou the Brave-Awful-Possessing-Male-Deity shalt descend [thither].' Then he replied, saying: 'I ⁹²⁵ will not descend [myself], but I have the cross-sword wherewith I specially subdued the land. (The name by which this sword is called is the Deity Thrust-Snap; ⁹²⁶ another name by which it is called is the Deity Awful-Snap, ⁹²⁷ and ⁹¹⁴ This name signifies "bear-moor." The name is now generally pronounced Kumano.

⁹¹⁵ Motowori ingeniously conjectures the text of this passage 大熊髪出, which makes no sense, to be a copyist's error for 大熊從山出, which gives the meaning rendered in the translation. The running hand form of 鰐 might well be mistaken for that of the single character 横力. The editor of 1687 is less happy in his conjecture that the character intended may be 横, "crocodile." This incident of the bear was thought important by the compiler for a mention of it to be inserted in his Preface. (See p. 5).

⁹¹⁶ The signification of this name is not clear. Taking zhi as an apocopated nigori'ed form of the Postposition shita, we might suppose taka-kura-zhi to signify "under the high store house" in allusion to the legend which forms the subject of this section. There are, however, reasons for doubting this etymology. (See Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XVIII, p. 48). In the Preface we have simply Takahura, without the final syllable zhi; but the omission of zhi in that place is almost certainly to be accounted for on euphonic grounds.

⁹¹⁷ This note to the original is believed to be an interpolation,

⁹¹⁸ 横力. Motowori avers that the character 横, "cross," has no importance, and should be neglected in reading. But this assertion seems gratuitous in the face of, for instance, such a Chinese locution as 横磨劍. We may be justified, perhaps, in paying no special heed to the Numeral "one" in this place, which Motowori neglects in his kana reading of the text.

⁹¹⁹ I.e., they fell down cut to pieces before they had even been cut at with this wonderful sword.

⁹²⁰ The character 御, "august," which should form the penultimate member of this compound name, is here omitted.

⁹²¹ See Sect. I, Note 5.

⁹²² See Sect. VIII, Note 7.

⁹²³ See Sect. IX, Note 18.

⁹²⁴ Conf. Sect. X, Note 1.

⁹²⁵ The humble character 僕, "servant," is here used.

⁹²⁶ Sazhi-futsu no kami. The translator follows Tanigaha Shisei in considering sazhi (Tanigaha Shisei in his "Perpetual Commentary" reads sashi without the nigori) to mean "thrust." For the rendering of futsu as "snap" another name for it is the August-Snap-Spirit, ⁹²⁸ This sword dwells in the temple of the Deity of Isonokami) ⁹²⁹ The manner in which I will send this sword down will be to perforate the ridge of [the roof of] Takakurazhi's stone-house, ⁹³⁰ and drop it through. (So the Brave-Awful-Possessing-Male-Deity instructed me, saying: 'I will perforate the ridge of [the roof of] thy store-house, and drop this sword through. ⁹³¹) So do thou, with the good eyes of morning, ⁹³² take it and present it to the august child of the Heavenly Deity.' So, on my searching my store-house early next morning in accordance with the instructions of the dream, there really was a cross-sword there. So I just present this cross-sword to thee."

in this and the two following names conf. Sect. VIII, Note 8. Moribe, however, in his "Ikzu no Chi-waki," asserts that futsu is but an alternative form of futo, "broad," "thick," or "vast," as shown by the existence of the phrase ma-futsu no kagami, "a true vast mirror."

⁹²⁸ Futsu no mi tame.

⁹²⁹ The name of this place, which is in the province of Yamato, seems to signify "above the rock." It is well known as the Pillow-Word for the syllables furu.

⁹³⁰ Properly what is known to Anglo-Orientalists as a "godown."

⁹³¹ The sentence here placed between braces is proposed by Motowori to supplement an evident lacuna in the text.

⁹³² Or, "luckily with morning eyes." Motowori remarks that even in modern times, special joy is felt at a good discovery made in the morning.

SECTION XLVI.—EMPEROR JIM-MU (PART III.—THE GIGANTIC CROW AND GODS WITH TAILS)

"Then His ⁹³³ Augustness the Great-High-Integrating-Deity again commanded and taught, saying: "August son of the Heavenly Deity! make no progress hence into the interior. The savage Deities are very numerous. I will now send from Heaven a crow eight feet [long]. ⁹³⁴ So that crow eight feet [long] shall guide thee. Thou must make thy progress following after it as it goes." So on [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko] making his progress following after the crow eight feet [long] in obedience to the Deity's instructions, he reached the lower course of the Yeshinu ⁹³⁵ river, where there was a person catching fish in a weir. ⁹³⁶ Then the august child of the Heavenly Deity asked, saying: "Who art thou?" He replied, saying: "I ⁹³⁷ am an Earthly Deity ⁹³⁸ and am called by the name of Nihe-motsu no Ko." ⁹³⁹ (This is the ancestor of the Cormorant-Keepers of Aha.) ⁹⁴⁰ On [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko] making his progress thence, a person with a tail ⁹⁴¹ came out of a well. The well shone. Then [His Augustness] asked: "Who art thou?" He replied, saying: "I am an Earthly Deity, and my name is Wi-hika." ⁹⁴² This is the ancestor of the Headmen of Yeshinu). ⁹⁴³ On his forthwith entering the mountains, ⁹⁴⁴ His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko again met a person with a tail. This person came forth pushing the cliffs apart. Then [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko] asked: "Who art thou?" He replied, saying; "I am an Earthly Deity, ⁹³³ The intention of the writer is here obscure, but he probably meant the following passage to form part of the dream, as is the case in the parallel passage of the "Chronicles." The inverted commas are therefore continued in the translation.

⁹³⁴ The characters 八咫鳥 (ya to-garasu), with which the original of this expression is written, combined with the mention in the Preface of the "great crow," have determined the translator to adopt the interpretation favoured by Tanigaha Shisei, viz., a "crow eight feet [long]." Motowori understands the expression to mean "an eight-headed crow." For the arguments on both sides see the Perpetual Commentary on the Chronicles of Japan," Vol. VII, p. 16, and Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XVIII, pp. 60-62, and Vol. VIII, pp. 34-58. See also for the translation of a parallel passage Sect. XVI, Note 23.

⁹³⁶ The character 罾, here rendered "weir" for want of a better word, is defined as signifying "a bamboo trap for catching fish."

⁹³⁷ The First Personal Pronoun is here represented by the humble character 僕, "servant." The other tailed deity mentioned immediately below uses the same expression.

⁹³⁸ See Sect. I, Note 11, and Sect. XLIV, Note 22, for the considerations that make it better to translate thus than to render by "I am a Deity of the Land."

⁹³⁹ I.e., "Offering-Bearing Child." Here and elsewhere the word ko, "child," as part of a proper name, should be understood as a kind of Honorific, employed probably in imitation of Chinese usage.

⁹⁴⁰ Ada No U-kaki. This must be understood to be a "gentile name" (kabane). The etymology of Ada is uncertain. The practice of fishing with the help of cormorants, though now almost obsolete, seems to have been very common in Japan down to the Middle ages.

⁹⁴¹ Commenting on a similar passage a little further on, Motowori, naively remarks: "It appears that in very ancient times such persons were occasionally "to be met with." It should be added that they are also mentioned in Chinese literature.

⁹⁴² I.e., "Well-Shine."

⁹⁴³ Yeshinu no obito. For Yeshinu see Note 3.

⁹⁴⁴ I.e., disappearing among the mountains.

and my name is Iha-oshi-waku no Ko. I heard [just] now that the august son of the Heavenly Deity was making his progress. So it is for that that I have come to meet thee." (This is the ancestor of the Territorial Owners of Yeshinu). ⁹⁴⁵ Thence [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko] penetrated over on foot to Uda. ⁹⁴⁶ So they say: "The Ugachi of Uda." ⁹⁴⁷

⁹⁴⁵ Yeshinu no kuzu. Kuzu is a contraction of kuni-nushi (properly 國主, with which characters the name is found written at the commencement of Sect. CVIII, though elsewhere the semi-phonetic rendering 國巢 or 國栖 is employed).

⁹⁴⁶ Etymology obscure.

⁹⁴⁷ Uda no ugachi. The meaning of the sentence is: "Hence the name of the Ugachi of Uda." Ugachi signifies "to penetrate." But the etymology seems a forced one, and Motowori is probably correct in identifying this "gentile name" with that of Ukashi, mentioned in the next sentence.

SECTION XLVII.—EMPEROR JIM-MU (PART IV.—THE UKASHI BRETHREN)

So then there were in Uda two persons, Ukashi the Elder Brother and Ukashi the Younger Brother. ⁹⁴⁸ So [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko] sent the crow eight feet [long] in advance to ask these persons, saying: "The august child of the Heavenly Deity has made a progress [hither]. Will ye respectfully serve him?" Hereupon Ukashi the Elder Brother waited for and shot at the messenger with a whizzing barb to make him turn back. So the place where the whizzing barb fell is called Kabura-zaki. ⁹⁴⁹ Saying that he intended to wait for and smite [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko], he [tried to] collect an army. But being unable to collect an army he said deceitfully that he would respectfully serve [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko], and built a great palace, ⁹⁵⁰ and in that palace set a pitfall, and waited. Then Ukashi the Younger Brother came out to ⁹⁵¹ [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko] beforehand, and made obeisance, saying: "Mine ⁹⁵² elder brother Ukashi the Elder Brother has shot at and turned back the messenger of the august child of the Heavenly Deity, and, intending to wait for and attack thee, has [tried to] collect an army; but, being unable to collect it, he has built a great palace, and set ⁹⁵³ a gin within it, intending to wait for and catch thee. So I have come out to inform [thee of this]." Then the two persons His Augustness Michino-Omi, ⁹⁵⁴ ancestor of the Ohotomo Chieftains, ⁹⁵⁵ and His Augustness Ohokume, ⁹⁵⁶ ancestor of the Kume Lords, ⁹⁵⁷ summoned Ukashi the Elder Brother and reviled him, saying: "Into the great palace which thou ⁹⁵⁸ hast built to respectfully serve [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko], be thou ⁹⁵⁹ the first to enter, and declare plainly the manner in which thou intendest respectfully to serve him; "—and forthwith grasping the hilts of their cross-swords, playing with their spears, ⁹⁶⁰ and fixing arrows [in their bows], they drove him in, whereupon he was caught in ⁹⁶¹ the gin which he himself had set, and died. So they forthwith pulled him out, and cut him in pieces. So the ⁹⁴⁸ Ye-ukashi and Oto-ukashi. Ukashi, as in the other compounds where it occurs, is probably in reality the name of a place. Its etymology is doubtful.

⁹⁴⁹ I.e., Barb Point or Cape.

⁹⁵⁰ Or, hall.

⁹⁵¹ The original has a respectful expression, which is elsewhere translated "waited on."

⁹⁵² The First Personal Pronoun is represented by the respectful character 僕 "servant."

⁹⁵³ Literally, "spread." This gin is supposed to have been of the kind whose top closes down after the man or animal has fallen into it.

⁹⁵⁴ I.e., "Grantee of the Way." This gentile name is said in the "Chronicles" to have been bestowed on this worthy in consideration of the services as a guide to his master the Emperor on the occasion of the latter's progress eastward.

⁹⁵⁵ See Sect. XXXIV, Note 12.

⁹⁵⁶ I.e., perhaps "Great Round Eyes," supposed to be a descendant of His Augustness Ama-tsu-kume (see however Sect. XXXIV, Note 7 for a discussion of the etymology of Kume).

⁹⁵⁷ See Sect. XXXIV, Note 13.

⁹⁵⁸ The expression i ga, here rendered "thou," is, as Motowori remarks, "extremely hard to understand," and its interpretation as an insulting form of the Second Personal Pronoun is merely tentative. Perhaps the text is corrupt.

⁹⁵⁹ The insulting Second Pronoun ore is here employed.

⁹⁶⁰ Here again we have an expression written phonetically and of uncertain import. The translator has followed Motowori in tentatively rendering it according to the ideographic reading of the parallel passage of the "Chronicles."

⁹⁶¹ Literally "struck by."

place is called Uda-no-Chihara. ⁹⁶² Having done thus, [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko] bestowed on his august army the whole of the great banquet presented [to him] by Ukashi the Younger Brother. At this time he sang, saying:

"The woodcock, for which I laid a wood-cock-snare and waited in the high castle of Uda, strikes not against it; but a valiant whale strikes against it. If the elder wife ask for fish, slice off a little like the berries of the stand soba; if the younger wife ask for fish, slice off a quantity like the berries of the vigorous sasaki." ⁹⁶³

"Ugh! ⁹⁶⁴ pfui! dolt! This is saying thou rascal. Ah! pfui! dolt! This is laughing [him] to scorn."

So Ukashi the Younger Brother (he is the ancestor of the Water Directors of Uda). ⁹⁶⁵

⁹⁶² I.e., Uda's Blood-Plain.

⁹⁶³ This Song is unusually difficult of comprehension: and the latest important commentator, Moribe, seems to show satisfactorily that all his predecessors, Motowori included, more or less misunderstood it. He had at least the advantage of coming after them, and the translator has followed his interpretation excepting with regard to isukukashi, the Pillow-Word for "whale," which is here rendered "valiant," in accordance with the traditional view of its signification. The soba tree is identified by Motowori with the Kaname-mochi, "Photinia glabra," This saka-ki, taken together with its Prefix ichi (here rendered "vigorous") is supposed in this place to signify, not the usual Cleyera japonica, but another species popularly known as the bishiya-gaki, whose English or Latin name the translator has failed to ascertain. It has a large berry, whereas the soba has a small one. . . The following is the gist of Moribe's exposition of the general signification of the Song: "If for Ukashi's mean design to kill the Emperor in a gin there be sought a term of comparison in the whales and woodcock forming the Imperial banquet, then in lieu of the woodcock that he expected to catch in the trap that he set, that great whale, the Imperial host, has rushed up against it. Again if, as the fishermen's wives might do, your (i.e., you soldiers') wives ask you for fish, then let each of you give to his elder wife, of whom he must have grown weary, only a small and bony portion, and to his younger wife, who is doubtless his heart's favourite, a good fleshy piece. So jocular a guess at the "penchants of the young warriors excites their ardour, which they give vent to in the following shouts."

⁹⁶⁴ Some of the Japanese originals of this string of Interjections are of uncertain import. The translator has been guided by Motowori's conjectures, with which Moribe mostly agrees. The exclamations are supposed not to form part of the actual Song, but to proceed from the mouths of the Imperial soldiers. The words rendered "this is saying thou rascal" (such is apparently their meaning) and those rendered "this is laughing [him] to scorn" seem to be glosses as old as the text, which had already been obscure in the eighth century. They are not written altogether phonetically.

⁹⁶⁵ Uda na Mohitori. This tribe or guild of "water-directors" was entrusted with the charge of the water, the ice, and the gruel used in the Imperial household. In later times the word Mohitori was corrupted to Mondo.

SECTION XLVIII.—EMPEROR JIM-MU (PART V.—THE EARTH-SPIDER OF THE CAVE OF OSAKA)

When [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko] made his progress, and reached the great cave of Osaka, ⁹⁶⁶ earth-spiders ⁹⁶⁷ with tails, [namely] eighty bravoos, ⁹⁶⁸ were in the cave awaiting him. So then the august son of the Heavenly Deity commanded that a banquet be bestowed on the eighty bravoos. Thereupon he set eighty butlers, one for each of the eighty bravoos, and girded each of them with a sword, and instructed the butlers, saying: "When ye hear me sing, cut [them down] simultaneously." So the Song by which he made clear to them to set about smiting the earth-spiders said:

"Into the great cave of Osaka people have entered in abundance, and are [there]. Though people have entered in abundance, and are [there], the children of the augustly powerful warriors will smite and finish them with [their] mallet-headed [swords], [their] stone-mallet [swords]: the children of the augustly powerful warriors, with [their] mallet-headed [swords], [their] stone-mallet [swords], would now do well to smite." ⁹⁶⁹

Having thus sung, they drew their swords, and simultaneously smote them to death.

⁹⁶⁶ The etymology of this name is not clear, but readers will of course not confound it with that of the modern town of Ohosaka (Osaka). The character rendered "cave," 室, signifies simply "apartment;" but the traditional reading is muro, which means a cave or pit dug in the earth. That the latter is the idea which the author wishes to convey becomes clear by comparison with a greater number of passages in the older literature. For a more particular discussion of this subject see Mr. Milne's paper entitled "Notes on Stone Implements from Otaru and Hakodate," published in Vol. VIII, part I of these "Transactions," p. 76 et seq., where a number of passages relative to the "earth-spiders" are likewise brought together.

⁹⁶⁷ Tsuchi-gumo, generally written 土蜘蛛, but here semi-phonetically 土雲. There is little doubt that by this well-known name, which has given rise to much conjecture, a race of cave-dwelling savages or a class of cave-dwelling robbers is intended. Motowori supposes that their name had its origin in a comparison of their habits with those of the spider. But it were surely more rational to regard it as a corruption of tsuchi-gomori, "earth-hiders," a designation as obvious as it is appropriate. The "Chronicles" describe one tribe of them as "being short in stature, and having long arms and legs like pigmies." For a further discussion of the subject see Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XIX, pp. 30-31, the "Perpetual Commentary on the Chronicles of Japan," Vol. VIII, p. 35, the "Tou-ya," Vol. XX, s.v. kumo and the "Examination of Difficult Words," Vol. 11, pp. 55 et seq.

⁹⁶⁸ The original term is takeru (梟師), which might also be rendered "bandit," or "robber chief."

⁹⁶⁹ The import of this poem is too clear to stand in need of explanation. The word mitsumitsushi, here rendered "augustly powerful" in accordance with Moribe's view, is understood by Motowori to mean "perfectly full," in allusion to the fully or perfectly round eyes of the deity Kume, to whose name he supposes there to be a reference. Mabuchi, on the other hand, explains the word to signify "young and flourishing." But Moribe's view both of this and of the import of kume as "warriors" seems so greatly preferable to any other, that the translator has not hesitated to follow him (conf. Sect. XXXIV, Note 7). The "children of the warriors" are of course the warriors themselves. With regard to the signification of the two kinds of swords here mentioned it has, however, been thought best to adhere to the usual view, and Note 10 to Sect. XXXIV should be referred to.

SECTION XLIX.—EMPEROR JIM-MU (PART. VI.—THE PRINCE OF TOMI AND THE SHIKI BRETHREN)

After this, when about to smite the Prince of Tomi, ⁹⁷⁰ he sang, saying:

"The children of the augustly powerful army will smite and finish the one stem of smelly chive in the millet-field,—the stem of its root, both its root and shoots." ⁹⁷¹

Again he sang:

"The ginger, which the children of the augustly powerful army planted near the hedge, resounds in the mouth. I shall not forget it. I will smite and finish it." ⁹⁷²

Again he sang, saying:

"Like the turbinidæ creeping round the great rock in the sea of Ise [on which blows] the divine wind, [so] will we creep round, and smite and finish them." ⁹⁷³

Again when he smote Shiki the Elder Brother and Shiki the Younger Brother, ⁹⁷⁴ the august army was temporarily exhausted. Then he sang, saying:

"As we fight placing our shields in a row, going and watching from between the trees on Mount Inasa, oh! we are famished. Ye keepers of cormorants, the birds of the island, come now to our rescue!" ⁹⁷⁵

⁹⁷⁰ See Sect. XLIV, Notes 28 et seq. The apparent want of sequence in this portion of the narrative is not noticed by Motowori. We might endeavour to, harmonize it by supposing that after having slain the "earth-spiders," etc., the Emperor Jim-mu turned round again to fight with the Prince of Tomi, who had harassed him in the earlier portion of his career as conqueror of Central Japan.

⁹⁷¹ The wild chive growing among the millet is of course the enemy, the Prince of Tomi and his host; and the gist of the Song is that the Imperial troops will smite and destroy them root and branch. The commentators suppose the simile to have been taken from the fields of millet which Jim-mu's troops planted for their subsistence during the long drawn out campaigns of early days.—The "stem of its root," so ne ga moto, is a curious expression, which is perhaps best accounted for by Moribe's supposition that we have here a pun on Sune ga moto, "Sune's house," Sune being a natural abbreviation of Nagasune, the name of the Prince of Tomi (see Sect. XLIV, Note 28).

⁹⁷² The sense of this Song is: "I shall not forget the bitterness of seeing my brother slain by Prince Nagasune's arrow (see the latter part of Sect. XLIV). The word hazhikami, here rendered ginger in accordance with Motowori's dictum, is taken by Moribe to signify the xanthoxylon. "Resounding in the mouth" is a curious phrase here used to express bitterness.

⁹⁷³ Motowori thus paraphrases this Song: "As the innumerable turbinidæ [-shells] creep round the great rock, so will I with the myriads of the Imperial host encompass the Prince of Tomi on every side, that there may be no outlet whereby he can escape." The shell here mentioned is a kind of small conch. Kama-kazo no, lit, "of divine wind," is the Pillow-Word for Ise, and is of disputed derivation, as is the word Ise itself. The curious reader should refer to Fujihara no Hikomaro's "Inquiry into the Meaning of the Names of All the Provinces" s.v. for the legend to which the name of Ise and its Pillow-Word were anciently traced and other conjectures on the point, The "great rock" here mentioned is not otherwise known.

⁹⁷⁴ Ye-shiki and Otoshiki. Shiki is the name of a district in the province of Yamato.

⁹⁷⁵ This Song is a request for provisions made by the Emperor to some fishermen, who were working their cormorants along the mountain-streams. Moribe refers it to an incident, not in the war, but in the hunt, and interprets differently the word here, in accordance with its usual meaning and with older authority, rendered "as we fight." He attributes to it the sense of "as we put our shields together," and thinks that the poet may have compared to shields the trunks of the trees. According to this view, the Song should be viewed rather as a joke. It may be mentioned that there is good authority for considering the word tata namete, "placing shields in a row," as a Punning Preface or Pillow-Word for words commencing with i (i being the Root of iru, "to shoot"), so that Moribe's explanation need not involve any tautology. It seems however somewhat far-fetched.—The position of Mount Inasa is uncertain, and the name itself of obscure derivation.

SECTION L.—EMPEROR JIM-MU (PART VII.—THE EMPIRE PACIFIED)

So then His Augustness Nigi-hayabi ⁹⁷⁶ waited on and said to the august child of the Heavenly Deity: "As I heard that [thou], the august child of the Heavenly Deity, hadst descended from Heaven, I have followed down to wait on thee." Forthwith presenting to him the heavenly symbols, ⁹⁷⁷ he respectfully served him. So His Augustness Nigi-hayabi wedded the Princess of Tomi, ⁹⁷⁸ sister of the Prince of Tomi, and begot a child, His Augustness Umashi-ma-ji. ⁹⁷⁹ (He was the ancestor of the Chiefs of the Warrior-Clan, ⁹⁸⁰ of the Grandees of Hodzumi; ⁹⁸¹ and of the Grandees of the Neck-Clan). ⁹⁸² So having thus subdued and pacified the savage Deities, and extirpated the unsubmissive people, [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko] dwelt at the palace of Kashibara ⁹⁸³ near Unebi ⁹⁸⁴ and ruled the Empire. ⁹⁸⁵

⁹⁷⁶ The component parts of this name, rendered according to the analogy of that in Sect. XXXIII, Note 5, may be interpreted to signify "Plenty-Swift." The genealogy of this god is not known.

⁹⁷⁷ I.e., the swords, quivers, bow, and arrows mentioned in Sect. XXXIII, as having been brought down from Heaven by the divine attendants of the Emperor Jim-mu's grandfather.

⁹⁷⁸ Tomi ya-bime, The syllable ya is inexplicable, but perhaps merely an Expletive.

⁹⁷⁹ The signification of this name is by no means clear; but, rendered according to the characters with which it is written in the "Chronicles," it would mean "Savoury-True-Hand."

⁹⁸⁰ Mononobe no murazhi. This and the two following are of course "gentile names."

⁹⁸¹ Hodzumi no omi. Hodzumi, which is the name of a place, signifies "rice-ears piled up."

⁹⁸² Une-be no omi. The interpretation of this name is given according is Motowori, who explains that the members of this family,—in particular the female members,—waited at the Emperor's table, and wore veils over their necks when so employed. The name is commonly corrupted to uneme.

⁹⁸³ Better known as Kashihabara. The name signifies "oak-moor," or rather "a place planted with oaks." This is usually, though without sufficient foundation, reckoned the earliest of the historical capitals of Japan. It is in Yamato.

⁹⁸⁴ Unebi is the name of a hill in Yamato. The etymology of the word is obscure.

⁹⁸⁵ I.e., "ruled the Empire from his palace of Kashibara near Unebi. For the expression 天下 (literally "[all] beneath Heaven"), here rendered "Empire," see Sect. XXVII, Note 13.

SECTION LI.—EMPEROR JIM-MU (PART. VIII.—HE WEDS I-SUKE-YORI-HIME)

So when he dwelt in Himuka, [His Augustness Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko] wedded ⁹⁸⁶ Princess Ahira, ⁹⁸⁷ younger sister of the Duke of Wobashi ⁹⁸⁸ in Ata, ⁹⁸⁹ and begot children: there were two, ⁹⁹⁰—His Augustness Tagishi-mimi, ⁹⁹¹ next His Augustness Kisu-mimi. ⁹⁹² But when he sought for a beautiful maiden to make her his Chief Empress, ⁹⁹³ His Augustness Oho-kume said: "There is here a beauteous maiden who is called the august child of a Deity. The reason why she is called the august child of a Deity is that the Princess Seya-datara, ⁹⁹⁴ daughter of Mizokuhi ⁹⁹⁵ of Mishima, ⁹⁹⁶ was admired on account of her beauty by the Great-Master-of-Things the Deity of Miwa, ⁹⁹⁷ qui, quum pulchra puella oletum fecit, in sagittam rubro [colore] fucatam se convertit, et ab inferiori parte cloacae [ad usum] faciendi oleti virginis privatas partes transfixit. Tunc pulchra virgo consternata est, et surrexit, et trepide fugit. Statim sagittam attulit, et juxta thalamum posuit. Subito [sagitta] formosus adolescens facta est, qui cito pulchram puellam sibi in matrimonio junxit, et filiam procreavit nomine Hoto-tarara-i-susugi-hime; ⁹⁹⁸ et est nomen alternativum Hime-tatara-i-suke-yori-hime. ⁹⁹⁹ (Id est posterior mutatio nominis, quoniam abhorruit facere mentionem privatarum partium). So therefore she is called the august child of a Deity. Hereupon seven beauteous maidens were out playing on the moor of Takasazhi, ¹⁰⁰⁰ and I-suke-

⁹⁸⁶ Or, "had wedded"; for the episode here related must be supposed to have taken place before Jim-mu and his army started eastward on their career of conquest.

⁹⁸⁷ Ahira-hime. Ahira is supposed by Motowori to be the name of a place in Satsuma. Its etymology is quite obscure.

⁹⁸⁸ Wobashi no kimi. Wobashi is supposed by Motowori to be the name of a place in Satsuma. The characters with which it is generally written mean "small bridge."

⁹⁸⁹ Ata is a place in Satsuma.

⁹⁹⁰ Or, "there were two Deities." The character employed is not that which itself actually signifies "deity," but is the Auxiliary Numeral for divine beings.

⁹⁹¹ I.e., perhaps "rudder-ears."

⁹⁹² Motowori adduces good reasons for believing this name to be but a slightly altered form of the preceding one, and for holding that in the original form of the tradition there was but one child mentioned.

⁹⁹³ See Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XX, pp. 10-15, for the reasons for thus interpreting the characters 大后 in the text. Elsewhere it has generally, for the sake of convenience, been simply rendered "Empress."

⁹⁹⁴ Seya-dotara-hime. The signification of the name is obscure. Motowori supposes Seya to be a place and tatara (nigori'ed to datara) perhaps a plant written with the Chinese character 華, said by Dr. Williams in his "Syllabic Dictionary" to be possibly a species of Heteroiropa.

⁹⁹⁶ A district in the province of Tsu (Settsu). The name signifies "three islands."

⁹⁹⁷ Miwa-no-oho-mono-mushi-no-kami. This god is supposed to be identical with Oho-kuni-nushi (the "Master of the Great Land," see end of Sect. XX and following Sects). The rigidly literal rendering of the name as here given would be "the Deity Great Master of Things of Miwa"; but the more intelligible version here given represents the Japanese author's meaning. For the traditional etymology of Miwa see the story related in Sect LXV.

⁹⁹⁸ Hoto significat partes privatas. Verbi tatara sensum supra s.v. Seya-datara-hime pertractavimus. I est vox expletiva. Susugi sensus est "trepide fugiens." Hime indicat regiam puellam.

⁹⁹⁹ I.e., Princess Tatara-Startled-Good-Princess.

¹⁰⁰⁰ Etymology obscure.

yori-hime ¹⁰⁰¹ was among them. His Augustness Ohokume, seeing I-suke-yori-hime, spoke to the Heavenly Sovereign in a Song, saying:

"Seven maidens on the moor of Takasazhi in Yamato:—which shall be interlaced?" ¹⁰⁰²

Then I-suke-yori-hime was standing first among the beauteous maidens. Forthwith the Heavenly Sovereign, having looked at the beauteous maidens, and knowing in his august heart ¹⁰⁰³ that I-suke-yori-hime was standing in the very front, replied by a Song, saying:

"Even [after nought but] a fragment[ary glimpse], I will intertwine the lovely [one] standing in the very front. ¹⁰⁰⁴

Then His Augustness Ohokume informed I-suke-yori-hime of the Heavenly Sovereign's decree, whereupon she, seeing the slit sharp eyes ¹⁰⁰⁵ of His Augustness Ohokume, sang in her astonishment, saying:

"Wherefore the slit sharp eye? ¹⁰⁰⁶

Then His Augustness Ohokume replied by a Song, saying:

"My slit sharp eyes [are] in order to find the maiden immediately." ¹⁰⁰⁷

¹⁰⁰¹ An abbreviated form of the princess's alternative name.

¹⁰⁰² The meaning of this Song is: "To which of the seven maidens now disporting themselves on the moor of Takasazhi shall I convey the Emperor's command to come that he may make her his consort, and sleep with his arms intertwined in hers?"—Motowori, overlooking the difference between mart, which is the word in the text, and the nigori'ed form magu met with in some other passages, misinterprets the last clause thus: "Which shall be sought?" He makes the same mistake in his explanation of the next Song.

¹⁰⁰³ I.e., "having a presentiment."

¹⁰⁰⁴ The translation of this Song follows Moribe's exegesis. Motowori interprets it thus; "Well, well! I will seek the lovely one standing in the very front." As here rendered, the little poem is quite clear,—simply a declaration on the Emperor's part that he will make the girl standing in front his wife.

¹⁰⁰⁵ Sakeru-to-me, the original of the phrase here rendered "slit sharp eyes," is obscure and variously understood by the commentators. Moribe supposes the god to have worn a casque with a vizor, and the slit to have been made in the latter, and not actually in, or rather near, the eyes. It should however be observed that, though the Japanese word saku means "to slit," the Chinese character in the text properly signifies "to tattoo (or brand) with ink," and is used with that meaning at the end of Sect. CXLIX, and elsewhere in the ancient books. The present writer, after comparing various passages in which the term occurs, thinks that we may understand a tattooing of the outer corners of the eyes, which would give to the latter the appearance of being long and sharp, or, if the tattooing were very dark, of being actually slit.

¹⁰⁰⁶ The first lines of this short poem are so hopelessly unintelligible that the commentators are not even agreed as to how the syllables composing them should be divided into words. For the straits to which Motowori and his predecessors were driven in their efforts to obtain some plausible signification, see his Commentary, Vol. XX, pp. 27-29, and for Moribe's totally divergent interpretation see "Idzu no Koto-waki," Vol. II, pp. 30-31. It is not worth while to quote here more such conjectures.—For the doubt attaching to the precise signification of the words rendered by "slit sharp eyes," see the preceding Note.

So the maiden said that she would respectfully serve [the Heavenly Sovereign].¹⁰⁰⁸ Hereupon¹⁰⁰⁹ the house of Her Augustness¹⁰¹⁰ I-suke-yori-hime was on [the back of] the River Sawi.¹⁰¹¹ The Heavenly Sovereign made a progress to the abode of I-suke-yori-hime, and augustly slept [there] one night.¹⁰¹² (The reason why that river was called the River Sawi was that on the River's banks the mountain-lily-plant grew in abundance. So the name of the mountain-lily-plant was taken, and the designation of River Sawi [bestowed]. The name by which the mountain-lily-plant was originally called was sawi). Afterwards, when I-suke-yori-hime came and entered into the palace, the Heavenly Sovereign sang augustly saying:

"In a damp hut on the reed-moor having spread layer upon layer of sedge mats, we two slept!"¹⁰¹³

The names of the august children thus born were: His Augustness Hiko-ya-wi,¹⁰¹⁴ next His Augustness Kamu-ya-wi-mimi,¹⁰¹⁵ next His Augustness Kamu-nuna-kaha-mimi"¹⁰¹⁶ (Three Deities.)¹⁰¹⁷

¹⁰⁰⁷ The signification of his Song is as plain as that of the preceding one is obscure.

¹⁰⁰⁸ Q.d., as his wife.

¹⁰⁰⁹ This initial expression is meaningless.

¹⁰¹⁰ Having become the Emperor's consort, this Honorific title is now prefixed for the first time to her name.

¹⁰¹¹ Sawi-gaha. Sawi, as we learn from the compiler's note below, was the name of a kind of lily.

¹⁰¹² Literally, "one sojourn."

¹⁰¹³ The signification of this Song is: "Now indeed thou comest to share the majesty of the palace. But the beginning of our intimacy was on that night when I came to thy humble dwelling on the reed-grown moor where, when we slept together, we had to pile mat upon mat to keep out the damp."—The translator has followed Moribe's interpretation throughout. Motowori takes in the sense of "ugly" the word here rendered "damp," and all the previous commentators give a different explanation of the words iya saya shikite, here translated by "spreading layer upon layer." They take them to mean "spreading more land more cleanly."

¹⁰¹⁴ This name may signify "prince eight-wells." But the interpretation of ya wi as "eight wells" in his and the following name is doubtful.

¹⁰¹⁵ This name may signify "divine-eight-wells-ears." But see preceding Note.

¹⁰¹⁶ This name may signify "divine-lagoon-river-ears." But perhaps Nuna-kaha is the name of a place.

¹⁰¹⁷ The character in the text is not actually "Deity," but 柱 hashira, the Auxiliary Numeral for Deities, which is constantly throughout these "Records" used in speaking of members of the Imperial family.

SECTION LII.—EMPEROR JIM-MU (PART. IX—TROUBLES WHICH FOLLOWED HIS DECEASE)

So when, after the decease of the Heavenly Sovereign, ¹⁰¹⁸ the elder half-brother, His Augustness Tagishi-mimi, ¹⁰¹⁹ wedded ¹⁰²⁰ the Empress I-suke-yori-hime, he plotted how he might slay his three younger brethren, pending which their august ¹⁰²¹ parent I-suke-yori-hime lamented, and made [the plot] known to her august children by a Song. The song said:

"From the River Sawi the clouds have risen across, and the leaves of the trees have rustled on Mount Unebi: the wind is about to blow." ¹⁰²²

Again she sang, saying:

"Ah! What rest on Mount Unebi as clouds in the day-time, will surely blow as wind at night-fall, [whence] the rustling of the leaves!" ¹⁰²³

When hereupon her august children, hearing and knowing [of the danger], were alarmed and forthwith were about to slay Tagishi-mimi, His Augustness Kamu-nuna-kaha-mimi said to his elder brother His Augustness Kamu-ya-wi-mimi: "Thy dear Augustness, [do thou] take a weapon, and go in and slay Tagishi-mimi." So he took a weapon and went in, and was about to slay him. But his arms and legs trembled so, that he was unable to slay him. So then the younger brother His Augustness Kamu-nuna-kaha-mimi begged [to be allowed] to take the weapon which his elder brother held, and went in and slew Tagishi-mimi. So again, in praise of his august name, he was called His Augustness Take-nuna-kaha-mimi. ¹⁰²⁴ Then His Augustness Kamu-ya-wi-mimi resigned [in favour of] the younger brother His Augustness Take-nuna-kaha-mimi, saying: "I could not slay the foeman; but Thine Augustness was at once able to slay him. So, though I be the elder brother, it is not right that I should be the superior. ¹⁰²⁵ Wherefore do Thine Augustness be the superior, and rule [all] beneath the ¹⁰¹⁸ I.e., the Emperor Jim-mu. His decease is not otherwise specially mentioned; but a formula at the end of the Section, which is repeated mutatis mutandis in the case of each Emperor, tells us the number of years he lived or reigned, and the place of his sepulture. Throughout these "Records," much matter is often placed in the reign of a Monarch already deceased, and which, according to our ideas, would more naturally be narrated under the heading of his successor.

¹⁰¹⁹ Who was the deceased Emperor's son by Princess Ahira (see Sect. LI, Note 6,) and consequently step-son to the Empress and half-brother to her three sons.

¹⁰²⁰ This is the meaning of the Chinese character in the text, Motowori tries to save the Empress-Dowager's reputation for conjugal fidelity by rendering it in his kana reading by a word signifying "raped."

¹⁰²¹ See Sect. XXII, Note 4.

¹⁰²² The import of this metaphorical poem, taken in its context, is too clear to need much comment. The rising off the clouds and the rustling of the leaves may be supposed to represent the murderer's preparations, and the blowing of the wind his actual onslaught.

¹⁰²³ The meaning of this Song is: "The would-be murderer remains quiet during the day-time like the clouds hanging to the mountain-side; but at night he will I burst upon you like the storm-wind. Already I hear the leaves begin to rustle; already he is gathering his men together."

¹⁰²⁴ The word take prefixed to the name of this prince signifies "brave."

¹⁰²⁵ I.e., either "superior to thee," or as Motowori understands the phrase, "the superior of all," scil. the Emperor.

Heaven. I ¹⁰²⁶ will assist Thine Augustness, becoming a priest, ¹⁰²⁷ and respectfully serving thee."

¹⁰²⁶ Though the elder brother, he here uses the humble character 僕 "servant," to show his respect and deference.

¹⁰²⁷ Literally, "a person who shuns," q.d. who shuns all pollution, and avoids certain food at certain seasons. Conf. the gentile name Imi-be commented on in Sect. XXXIII, Note 32.

SECTION LIII.—EMPEROR JIM-MU (PART X.— GENEALOGIES)

So His Augustness Hiko-ya-wi (is the ancestor of the Chieftains of Mamuta, ¹⁰²⁸ and of the Chieftains of Teshima.) ¹⁰²⁹ His Augustness Kamu-ya-wi-mimi (is the ancestor of the Grandees of Oho, ¹⁰³⁰ of the Chieftains of the Tribe of Chihisako, ¹⁰³¹ of the chieftains of the Tribe of Sahahi, ¹⁰³² of the Dukes of Hi, ¹⁰³³ of the Dukes of Ohokida, ¹⁰³⁴ of the Dukes of Aso, ¹⁰³⁵ of the Chieftains of the Granaries of Tsukushi, ¹⁰³⁶ of the Grandees of the Sazaki Tribe, ¹⁰³⁷ of the Rulers of the Tribe of Sazaki, ¹⁰³⁸ of the Rulers of Wo-Hatsuse, ¹⁰³⁹ of the Suzerains of Tsuke, ¹⁰⁴⁰ of the Rulers of the land of Iyo, ¹⁰⁴¹ of the Rulers of the land of Shinanu, ¹⁰⁴² of the Rulers of the land of Ihaki in Michinoku, ¹⁰⁴³ of the Rulers of the Land of Naka [153] in Hitachi, ¹⁰⁴⁴ of the Rulers of the land of ¹⁰²⁸ Mamuta no murazhi. Mamuta is said to have been a place in the province of Kahachi. The etymology of the name is obscure.

¹⁰²⁹ Teshima no murazhi. Teshima is said to have been a place in the province of Tsu (Settsu). The name may signify "luxuriant island."

¹⁰³⁰ Oho no omi. Oho is said to have been a place in the province of Yamato. The name is mostly written with characters signifying "vast" or "numerous."

¹⁰³¹ Chihisako-be no murazhi. Chihisako is said to have been a place in the province of Etchiū. But the name of this family has also been traced to an incident mentioned in the "Newly Selected Catalogue of Family Names" as having occurred in the reign of the Emperor Yūriyaku, when, owing to a verbal error, a tax was collected in children instead of in cocoons. The monarch, amused at the mistake, is said to have granted to the tax-collector the "gentile name" of Chihisako, i.e., "Little Child."

¹⁰³² Sakahi-be no muhazhi. Sakahi signifies "boundary," and this "gentile name" is traced to the fact, mentioned in the "Newly Selected Catalogue of Family Names," that the founder of the family distinguished himself by setting up boundary-marks on the frontiers of different provinces in the reign of the Emperor In-giyō (first half of the fifth century of the Christian era).

¹⁰³³ Hi no kimi, Hi (肥) is the name of a province (now two provinces) in the south-western island of Tsukushi. It is first mentioned in Sect. V, Note 17.

¹⁰³⁴ Ohokida no kimi. Ohokida is the name of a district in the province of Toyo.

¹⁰³⁵ Aso no himi. Aso is the name of a district in Higo, containing a celebrated volcano.

¹⁰³⁶ Tsukushi no miyake no murazhi.

¹⁰³⁷ Sazaki-be no omi. This name is connected by the compiler of the "Newly Selected Catalogue of Family Names" with that of the Emperor Nin-toku (Oho-sazaki no Mikoto), for which see Sect. CIV, Note 18.

¹⁰³⁸ Sazaki-be no miyatsuko.

¹⁰³⁹ Wo hatsuse no miyatsuko. This name is connected with that of the Emperor Mu-retsū, whose name was Wo-Hatsuse no Waka-Sazaki.

¹⁰⁴⁰ Tsuke no atahe. Tsuke is the name of a place in Yamato.

¹⁰⁴¹ Iyo no kuni no miyatsuko. For the province of Iyo see Sect. V, Note 26.

¹⁰⁴² Shinanu no kuni no miyatsuko. For the province of Shinanu (Shinano) see Sect. XXXII, Note 26.

¹⁰⁴³ Michinoku no Ihaki no kuni no miyatsuko. A popular derivation of Michinoku is from michi no kuni, "the country of the road;" but a more likely one, sanctioned by Motowori, is from michi no oku, "the furthest or more distant part of the road." (For the word "road," as here used, conf. Sect. LXV, Note 2.). It was for many centuries, and is still in poetry, a vague name for the entire north of Japan. Ihaki, sometimes considered a province, and at others only ranking as a district, formed its south-eastern portion along the Pacific sea-board. The name seems to signify "rock (or hard) castle."

Nagasa, ¹⁰⁴⁵ of the Suzerains of Funaki in Ise, ¹⁰⁴⁶ of the Grandees of Niha in Wohari, ¹⁰⁴⁷ and of the Grandees of Shimada.) ¹⁰⁴⁸

¹⁰⁴⁵ Nagasa no kuni no miyatsuko. Nagasa is a district in that portion of the old province of Kadzusa which was in very early historical times cut off from the little province of Aha. The import of the name is not clear.

¹⁰⁴⁶ Ise no Funaki no atahe. For Ise see Sect. XLIX, Note 4. Of Funaki nothing is known. The characters with which the name is written signify "boat-tree."

¹⁰⁴⁷ Ohari no Niha no omi. Wohari is one of the central provinces of Japan. The name is of uncertain origin. Niha is the name of a district, and is of uncertain origin.

¹⁰⁴⁸ Shimada no omi. Shimada is the name of a district in Wohari, and signifies "island rice-fields."

SECTION LIV.—EMPEROR JIM-MU (PART XI.—HIS AGE AND PLACE OF BURIAL)

His Augustness Kamu-nuna-kaha-mimi ruled the Empire. Altogether the august years of this Heavenly Sovereign Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko were one hundred and thirty-seven. ¹⁰⁴⁹ His august mausoleum is on the top of the Kashi Spur on the northern side of Mount Unebi. ¹⁰⁵⁰

¹⁰⁴⁹ The author's confused style must not here mislead the student. It is after the decease of the Emperor Jim-mu (Kamu-yamato-ihare-biko), who attains to the age of a hundred and thirty-seven, that the Emperor Suwi-zei (Kamu-nuna-kaha-mimi) begins to rule.

¹⁰⁵⁰ For Unebi see Sect. LI, Note 9. Kashi signifies "oak." The word rendered "spur" is wo.

SECTION LV.—EMPEROR SUI-ZEI

His Augustness Kamu-nuna-kaha-mimi dwelt at the palace of Takawoka in Kadzuraki, ¹⁰⁵¹ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded Kaha-mata-bime, ¹⁰⁵² ancestress of the Departmental Lords of Shiki, ¹⁰⁵³ and begot an august child: His Augustness Shiki-tsu-hiko-tama-demi ¹⁰⁵⁴ (one Deity), The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were forty-five. His august mausoleum is on the Mound of Tsukida. ¹⁰⁵⁵

¹⁰⁵¹ In the province of Yamato. Taka-woka signifies "high mound." Kadzuraki means "pueraria castle," a name accounted for by a legend in the "Chronicles," which relates how an earth-spider was caught in this place by means of a net made of pueraria tendrils. Kadzuraki was the name, not only of a town, but of a district.

¹⁰⁵² I.e., the Princess of Kahamata, a place in Kahachi. The name signifies "river-fork." For the omission in this and a few other places of the words "daughter of," etc., which might be expected instead of "ancestress," see Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXI, p. 4.

¹⁰⁵³ Shiki na agata-nushi. Shiki is in Yamato. The signification of the name seems to be "stone castle."

¹⁰⁵⁴ Shiki-tsu-hiko signifies "Prince of Shiki." Motowori believes Tamade to be in like manner the name of a place, while he interprets mi as the common abbreviation of the Honorific (?) mimi.

¹⁰⁵⁵ A place in Yamato. Motowori derives the name from tsuki modern toki, the "ibis," and ta, "rice-field."

SECTION LVI.—EMPEROR AN-NEI

His Augustness Shiki-tsu-hiko-tama-de-mi dwelt in the palace of Ukiana at Kata-shiha,¹⁰⁵⁶ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded Akuto-hime,¹⁰⁵⁷ daughter of the Departmental Lord Haye,¹⁰⁵⁸ elder brother of Kaha-mata-bime, and begot august children: His Augustness Toko-ne-tsu-hiko-irone,¹⁰⁵⁹ next His Augustness Oho-yamato-hiko-suki-tomo,¹⁰⁶⁰ next His Augustness Shiki-tsu-hiko.¹⁰⁶¹ Of the august children of this Heavenly Sovereign,—three Deities,—His Augustness Oho-yamato-hiko-suki-tomo [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. There were two Kings,¹⁰⁶² children of the next [brother], His Augustness Shiki-tsu-hiko. One child¹⁰⁶³ (was the ancestor of the Territorial Lords of Suchi in Iga,¹⁰⁶⁴ of the Territorial Lords of Nabari,¹⁰⁶⁵ and of the Territorial Lords of Minu);¹⁰⁶⁶ one child,¹⁰⁶⁷ His Augustness Wa-chi-tsumi,¹⁰⁶⁸ dwelt in the palace of Miwi in Ahaji.¹⁰⁶⁹ So this King had two daughters: the name of the elder was Hahe-irone,¹⁰⁷⁰ and another name for her was Her Augustness Princess Oho-yamato-kuni-are:¹⁰⁷¹ the name of the younger was ¹⁰⁵⁶ In Kahachi: uki-ana signifies "floating hole," Kata-shiha is said to signify "hard rock" (kata-ih); but this seems doubtful, and the reading given by the characters in the text is not Kata-shiha, but Kata-shiho.

¹⁰⁵⁷ I.e., Princess of Akuto, or Akuta,—for the latter form of the name is more common. There exists a place thus called in Settsu. The derivation of the word is obscure.

¹⁰⁵⁸ Agata-nushi-Haye. The reading of this name is obscure, and its, derivation uncertain.

¹⁰⁵⁹ Irone signifies "elder brother" or "elder sister." The rest of the compound is obscure.

¹⁰⁶⁰ The first three elements of the compound signify "Great Yamato Prince." The last two are obscure, but Motowori identifies suki (see Note 3 to preceding Sect.)

¹⁰⁶¹ I.e., "Prince of Shiki"; so called, it is supposed, with reference to the place of residence of his grandfather.

¹⁰⁶² The character thus translated is 王, of which "King" is the original and proper signification. To judge by some other passages in the ancient histories, it had not yet in the 8th century altogether paled to the lesser meaning of "prince," which has belonged to it in later times when denoting Japanese personages. It is still, as far as possible, used to denote the rulers of all countries excepting Japan, the zealous admirers of the native literature and institutions even designating by it the Emperor of China, who, one would have thought, had a special right to the more Honorific title of Emperor, which his own subjects were the first to invent. On the whole, therefore, "King" seems to be the most appropriate rendering. The characters 王女 are, by analogy, rendered "Queen."

¹⁰⁶³ The text has "descendant"; but it must here be corrupt or at least faulty, as may be seen by the omission of the proper name.

¹⁰⁶⁴ Iga no Suchi no inaki. The etymology of Iga and that of Suchi are alike obscure. See however Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXI, p. 13, for the traditional derivation of the former. It is the name of a small province which in very ancient times formed part of the province of Ise.

¹⁰⁶⁵ Nabari no inaki. Nabari is in Iga. The name signifies, "hiding."

¹⁰⁶⁶ Minu no inaki. Minu, not to be confounded with the province of the same name, is a place in Iga. The name probably signifies "three moors."

¹⁰⁶⁷ I.e., the other child.

¹⁰⁶⁸ Motowori reads Chichitsumi. In any case, the name remains obscure.

¹⁰⁶⁹ For Ahaji see Sect. VI, Note 3. Mi-wi signifies "august well," and the name is traced to the custom of bringing water from the Island of Ahaji for use in the Imperial Palace, as mentioned in Sect. CXXIX of the present work, and elsewhere in the early literature.

¹⁰⁷⁰ Irone means "elder sister." Hahe is of uncertain import, it being written with completely different characters in the two histories.

¹⁰⁷¹ Oho-yamato-kuni-are-hime-no-mikoto. Oho-yamato-kuni signifies "the land of Great Yamato," and hime signifies "princess" or "maiden." Motowori suggests that are, which is an obscure word, may signify "pure."

Hahe-irodo. ¹⁰⁷² The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were forty-nine. Augustness mausoleum est in privatis partibus Montis Unebi. ¹⁰⁷³

¹⁰⁷² Irodo signifies "younger sister." For hahe conf. Note 15.

¹⁰⁷³ Scil. in interiori parte montis, e.g. in spelunca. Motowori explains the use of the term by reference to such words as foot, where the name of a portion of the human body is applied to a mountain. In Japanese there are others besides ashi ("foot"), such as itadaki, hara and koshi.

SECTION LVII.—EMPEROR I-TOKU

His Augustness Oho-yamato-hiko-suki-tomo dwelt in the palace of Sakahiwo at Karu, ¹⁰⁷⁴ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded her Augustness Princess Futo-ma-waka, ¹⁰⁷⁵ another name for whom was Her Augustness Princess Ihibi, ¹⁰⁷⁶ ancestress of the Departmental Lords of Shiki, ¹⁰⁷⁷ and begot august children: His Augustness Mi-ma-tsu-hiko-wake-shine, ¹⁰⁷⁸ next His Augustness Tagishi-hiko ¹⁰⁷⁹ (two Deities). So His Augustness Mi-ma-tsu-hiko-kawe-shine [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. The next His Augustness Tagishi-hiko (was the ancestor of the Lords of Chinu, ¹⁰⁸⁰ of the Lords of Take in Tajima, ¹⁰⁸¹ and of the Territorial Lords of Ashiwi). ¹⁰⁸² The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were forty-five. His august mausoleum is above the Vale of Manago by Mount Unebi. ¹⁰⁸³

¹⁰⁷⁴ Karu, which still remains as a village in the province of Yamato, was famous down to the early historical days of Japan, being often mentioned by the poets. The derivation of the name is quite uncertain. Sakahiwo probably signifies "boundary mound."

¹⁰⁷⁵ Futo-ma-wakes-hime-no-mikoto. The compound signifies "vast, true, and young princess."

¹⁰⁷⁶ Ihibi-hime-no-mikoto. The name seems to signify "rice-sun-princess."

¹⁰⁷⁷ See Sect. LV, Note 3.

¹⁰⁷⁸ The import of this name is obscure.

¹⁰⁷⁹ i.e., perhaps "rudder prince."

¹⁰⁸⁰ Chinu no wake. For Chinu see Sect. XLIV, Notes 35 and 36.

¹⁰⁸¹ Tajima no Take no wake. Motowori tells us that no mention of any place called Take in the province of Tajima is to be found in any other book.

¹⁰⁸² Ashiwi no inaki. The same remark applies to this name as to the last. The two "gentile names" here mentioned are equally unknown except from this passage.

¹⁰⁸³ Unebi-yama no Manago-dani. It is in Yamato, and is now called Masago. The name signifies "a sandy place, or desert."

SECTION LVIII.—EMPEROR KO-SHO

His Augustness Mi-ma-tsu-hiko-kawe-shine dwelt at the palace of Waki-no-kami in Kadzuraki, ¹⁰⁸⁴ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded Her Augustness Princess Yoso-taho, ¹⁰⁸⁵ younger sister of Oki-tsu-yoso ¹⁰⁸⁶ ancestor of the Chiefs of Wohari, ¹⁰⁸⁷ and begot august children: His Augustness Ame-oshi-tarashi-hiko, ¹⁰⁸⁸ and next His Augustness Oho-yamato-tarashi-hiko-kuni-oshi-bito ¹⁰⁸⁹ (two Deities). Now the younger brother, His Augustness Tarashi-hiko-kuni-oshi-bito [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. The elder brother His Augustness Ame-oshi-tarashi-hiko (was the ancestor of the Grandees of Kasuga, ¹⁰⁹⁰ the Grandees of Ohoyake, ¹⁰⁹¹ the Grandees of Ahata, ¹⁰⁹² the Grandees of Wonu; ¹⁰⁹³ the Grandees of Kaki-no-moto, ¹⁰⁹⁴ the Grandees of Ichihwi; ¹⁰⁹⁵ the Grandees of Ohosaka, ¹⁰⁹⁶ the Grandees of Ana, ¹⁰⁹⁷ the Grandees of Taki; ¹⁰⁹⁸ the Grandees of Haguri, ¹⁰⁹⁹ the Grandees of Chita, ¹¹⁰⁰ the Grandees of Muza; ¹¹⁰¹ the Grandees of Tsunuyama, ¹¹⁰² the Dukes of Ihitaka in Ise, ¹¹⁰³ the Dukes of Ichishi, ¹¹⁰⁴ and the Rulers of the Land of Chika-tsu-Afumi). ¹¹⁰⁵

¹⁰⁸⁴ In Yamato. The name of Waki-no-kami is of uncertain derivation. In the "Chronicles" the Emperor Kō-shō is said to have "dwelt at the palace of Ikegokoro at Waki-no-kami." For Kadzuraki see Sect. LV, Note 1.

¹⁰⁸⁵ Yoso-taho-bime-no-mikoto. Here written phonetically, this name appears in the "Chronicles" written with characters to which the signification of "perfectly ornamented princess" should be attributed.

¹⁰⁸⁶ The signification of this name is obscure, but it seems to be connected in some way with that of the other sister.

¹⁰⁸⁷ Wohari no murazhi.

¹⁰⁸⁸ i.e., heavenly great perfect prince."

¹⁰⁸⁹ i.e., "great Yamato perfect prince, country great man." This name appears in an abbreviated form in the next sentence.

¹⁰⁹⁰ Kasuga na omi. Kasuga is a celebrated place in the province of Yamato. The name is of uncertain origin, though the "Catalogue of Family Names" gives a story referring it to Kasu gaki (糟垣), i.e., "lees fence." The curious combination of characters with which Kasuga is written,—春日—may be traced to the Pillow-Word haru-hi no (春日之) which was not unnaturally prefixed to a name which so much resembled the Verb kasumu, "to be misty."

¹⁰⁹¹ Ohoyake no omi. Ohoyake is a place in Yamato. The name signifies "great granary."

¹⁰⁹² Ahata no omi. Ahata is a place in Yamashiro. The name signifies "millet-field."

¹⁰⁹³ Wonu no omi. Wonu is a place in Afumi. The name signifies "little moor."

¹⁰⁹⁴ Kakinomoto-uo-omi. Kaki-no-moto signifies "at the bottom of the persimmon-tree," and the name is said by the compiler of the "Catalogue of Family Names" to have been granted to this family in allusion to a persimmon-tree which grew near their gate. This name was rendered illustrious in the eighth century by the poet Kakinomoto Hitomaro (See the present writer's "Classical Poetry of the Japanese," p. 217 of seq.).

¹⁰⁹⁵ Ichihwi no omi. Ichihwi is in Yamato. The name may signify "oak-well."

¹⁰⁹⁶ Ohosaka no omi. Ohosaka is a place in Bingo. The name signifies "great hill, or pass."

¹⁰⁹⁷ Ana no omi. Ana is a department in Bingo. The name signifies "hole" or "cave."

¹⁰⁹⁸ Taki no omi. Taki is a district in Tamba. The name, which is a common one in Japan, means "water-falls."

¹⁰⁹⁹ Haguri no omi. Haguri is a district in Wohari. The signification of the name is obscure.

¹¹⁰⁰ Chita no omi. Chita is a district in Wohari. The signification of the name is obscure.

¹¹⁰¹ Musa no omi. Mudza is a district in Kadzusa. The name seems to be a corruption of the Chinese words 武射, "warlike archer."

¹¹⁰² Tsunuyama no omi. The family, the place, and the signification of the name are alike obscure.

¹¹⁰³ Ise no Ihitaka no kimi. Ihitaka is the name of a district, and is traced to the signification of "abundant rice."

¹¹⁰⁴ Ichishi no kimi. Ichishi is a district in Ise. The signification of the name is obscure.

¹¹⁰⁵ Chika tsu Afumi no kuni-no-miyatsuko. For Chika-tsu-Afumi see Sect. XXIX, Note 20.

The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were ninety-three. His August mausoleum is on Mount Hakata ¹¹⁰⁶ at Waki-no-kami.

¹¹⁰⁶ In Yamato. The signification of the name is obscure.

SECTION LIX.—EMPEROR KOAN

His Augustness Oho-yamato-tarashi-hiko-kuni-oshi-bito dwelt in the palace of Akidzushima at Muro ¹¹⁰⁷ in Kadzuraki, and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded his niece Her Augustness Princess Oshika, ¹¹⁰⁸ and begot august children: His Augustness Oho-kibi-no-moro-susumi, ¹¹⁰⁹ next His Augustness, Oho-yamato-ne-ko-hiko-futo-ni ¹¹¹⁰ (two Deities). So His Augustness Oho-yamato-ne-ko-hiko-futo-ni [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. The heavenly Sovereign's august years were one hundred and twenty-three. His august mausoleum is on the Mound of Tamade. ¹¹¹¹

¹¹⁰⁷ In Yamato. Muro signifies "cave" or "pit." Aki-dzu-shima, "the Island of the Dragon-Fly," is frequently used as an alternative name of Japan (see Sect. V, Note 26). See also the Emperor Yū-riyaku's song given in Sect. CLVI.

¹¹⁰⁸ Oshika-hime-no-mikoto. The name Oshika, which is obscure, appears in the "Chronicles" under the form of Oshi, which has generally been interpreted by Motowori (whom the translator follows) as a corruption of ohoshi, "great." This version of the name makes it harmonize with that of the Princess's father.

¹¹⁰⁹ See Sect. LX, Note 11.

¹¹¹⁰ This name seems to signify "Great Yamato's Lord Prince, the Vast Jewel."

¹¹¹¹ Tamade no woka. In Yamato. For this name see Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXI, pp. 37-38.

SECTION LX.—EMPEROR KŌ-REI

His Augustness Oho-yamato-ne-ko-hiko-futo-ni dwelt at the Palace of Ihodo at Kuruda,¹¹¹² and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded Her Augustness Princess Kuhashi,¹¹¹³ daughter of Ohome,¹¹¹⁴ ancestor of the Departmental Lords of Tohochi,¹¹¹⁵ and begot an august child: His Augustness Oho-yamato-ne-ko-hiko-kuni-kuru¹¹¹⁶ (one Deity). Again he wedded Princess Chiji-haya-ma-waka of Kasuga,¹¹¹⁷ and begot an august child: Her Augustness Princess Chiji-haya¹¹¹⁸ (one Deity). Again wedding Her Augustness Princess Oho-yamato-kuni-are,¹¹¹⁹ he begot august children: Her Augustness Yamato-to-mo-so-bime,¹¹²⁰ next His Augustness Hiko-sashi-kata-wake;¹¹²¹ next His Augustness Hiko-isa-seri-biko,¹¹²² another name for whom is His Augustness Oho-biki-tsu-hiko: next Yamato-to-bi-haya-waka-ya-hime¹¹²³ (four Deities). Again he wedded Haheirodo,¹¹²⁴ younger sister of Her Augustness Princess Are, and begot august children,—His Augustness Hiko-same-ma,¹¹²⁵ next His Augustness Waka-hiko-take-kibi-tsu-hiko¹¹²⁶ (two Deities). The august children of this Heavenly Sovereign [numbered] in all eleven Deities (five kings and three queens). So His Augustness Oho-yamato-ne-ko-hiko-kuni-kuru [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. The two Deities His Augustness Oho-kibi-tsu-hiko and His Augustness Waka-take-kibi-tsu-hiko together set sacred jars¹¹²⁷ at the front¹¹²⁸ of the River Hi¹¹²⁹ in

¹¹¹³ Kuhashi-hime-no-mikoto. The name signifies "beautiful princess."

¹¹¹⁴ This seems to have been originally not a personal name, but the name of a place in Wohari.

¹¹¹⁵ To-hochi no agata-mushi. Tohochi is a district in Yamato. The name seems to signify "ten marts."

¹¹¹⁶ This name signifies "great Yamato's lord prince who rules the land."

¹¹¹⁷ Kasuga no-chiji-haya-ma-waka-hime. This name probably signifies "the thousand-fold brilliant truly young princess of Kasuga." For Kasuga see Sect, LVIII, Note 7.

¹¹¹⁸ Chiji-haya-hime-no-mikoto, i.e., probably "thousand-fold brilliant princess."

¹¹¹⁹ Oho-yamato-kuni-are-hime-no-mikoto. See Sect. LVI, Note 16.

¹¹²⁰ Motowori assigns to this name the signification of "Yamato's hundred thousand-fold illustrious princess," and has a very long note on the subject in Vol. XXI, p. 42, et seq.

¹¹²¹ The signification of this name is not clear.

¹¹²² i.e., "prince valorously advancing prince." The alternative name signifies "Great Prince of Kibi," and both refer to his conquest of the province of Kibi as related a little further on in this Section. Motowori gives good reasons for supposing that Oho-kibi-no-moro-susumi, i.e. "He Who Completely Advances in Great Kibi," is but another form of the same name, erroneously inserted in the account of the preceding reign (see Sect, LIX, Note 3).

¹¹²³ i.e., perhaps "Yamato's hundred-fold wondrous brilliant young ornamental Princess." The name resembles that of the elder sister.

¹¹²⁴ For this and the next following names see Sect. LVI, Notes 17 and 16 respectively.

¹¹²⁵ This name is obscure, and differs from that given in the parallel passage of the "Chronicles," where we read Sashima. The latter sounds more authentic.

¹¹²⁶ i.e., "the young prince the brave prince of Kibi." This name refers to his conquest of Kibi, as related a few lines further on.

¹¹²⁷ i.e., earthenware jars of a moderate size, probably intended to hold the rice-liquor offered to the gods, Being easily broken, they were planted in the ground up to a certain height.

¹¹²⁸ The probable meaning of this peculiar expression is "a bend in the river,"

¹¹²⁹ Written with the character 氷, "ice," which may however be only phonetic. No river of this name is anywhere else mentioned as flowing through the province of Harima, and one is tempted to suppose that there is some confusion with the celebrated river Hi, which figures so frequently in the Idzumo cycle of legends.

Hari-ma; ¹¹³⁰ and, making Harima the mouth of the road, ¹¹³¹ subdued and pacified the Land of Kibi. So His Augustness Oho-kibi-tsu-hiko (was the ancestor of the Grandees of Kamu-tsu-michi in Kibi) ¹¹³² The next, His Augustness Waka-hiko-take-kiki-tsu-hiko (was the ancestor of the Grandees of Shimo-tsu-michi in Kibi ¹¹³³ and of the Grandees of Kasa ¹¹³⁴). The next His Augustness Hiko-same-ma (was the ancestor of the Grandees of Uzhika in Harima ¹¹³⁵). The next, His Augustness Hiko-sashi-kata-wake (was the ancestor of the Grandees of Tonami in Koshi, ¹¹³⁶ of the Grandees of Kunisaki in the Land of Toyo, ¹¹³⁷ of the Dukes of Ihobara, ¹¹³⁸ and of the Maritime Suzerains of Tsunuga). ¹¹³⁹ The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were one hundred and six. His august mausoleum is at Umasaka at Kotawoka. ¹¹⁴⁰

¹¹³⁰ One of the central provinces of Japan, on the northern shores of the Inland Sea. Some derive the name from hagi-hara, "lespedeza moor," while others, connect it with hari, a "needle," Neither etymology has much to recommend it.

¹¹³¹ i.e., "their point of departure." It must also be remembered that "road" came to have the sense of "circuit" or "province," so that we might translate this phrase by "the commencement of the circuit." Conf. such denominations as Koshi no michi no kuchi, Koshi no michi no naka, and Koshi no michi no shiri for what are in modern parlance the provinces of Echizen, Etchiū and Echigo. The region nearest to the capital was called the mouth, while equally graphic designations were bestowed on the more remote districts. It was, as we learn by comparison with a passage in the history of the reign of the Emperor Su-jin (see Sect. LXVI, Note 13), customary thus to plant earthenware jars in the earth at the point whence an army started on an expedition, this being considered a means of invoking upon it the blessing of the gods. Not only so, but down to the Middle Ages travellers in general were in the habit of worshipping at the shrine of the god of roads. For "road" in the sense of "circuit," "province," or "administrative division" see Sect. LXVI, Note 2.

¹¹³² Kibi no kamu-tsu-michi no omi. Kamu-tsu-michi i.e., "the Upper Road" or "Circuit," was the ancient name of the province of Bizen (or of a portion of it), which formerly was a part of the Land of Kibi.

¹¹³³ Kibi no shimo-tsu-michi no omi. Shimo-tsu-michi means "the lower road," and was the ancient name of a portion of the province of Bitchiū, which formerly was a part of the land of Kibi.

¹¹³⁴ Kasa no omi, i.e., "Grandees of the Hat," a "gentile name" which is referred by the compiler of the "Catalogue of Family Names" to an incident in the reign of the Emperor Ō-jin, which he however by no means clearly relates (See Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXI; p.p. 57-58).

¹¹³⁵ Harima no Uzhika no omi. Uzhika is the name of a place. It is written with characters signifying "cow and deer," but the true derivation is quite uncertain.

¹¹³⁶ Koshi no Tonami no omi. Tonami is a district in Etchiū. The signification of the name is uncertain.

¹¹³⁷ Toyo-kuni no Kunisaki no omi. Kunisaki is a district in Bungo. The name seems to signify "land's end."

¹¹³⁸ Ihobara no kimi. Ihobara is a district in Suruga. The signification of the name is obscure.

¹¹³⁹ Tsunuga no ama no atahe. For Tsunuga see Sect. CI, Notes 3 and 12. Perhaps the name should rather be rendered "the Suzerains of Ama in Tsunuga," as Ama may, after all, as Motowori suggests, be here the name of a place.

¹¹⁴⁰ In the Province of Yamato. Kata-woka signifies "side-mound" or "incomplete mound." Uma-saka signifies "horse-hill" or "horse-pass." Umasaka should perhaps be understood as the particular designation of a portion of the ascent of Katawoka, which is mentioned in the "Chronicles" as the name of a mountain.

SECTION LXI.—EMPEROR KŌ-GEN

His Augustness Oho-yamato-ne-ko-hiko -kuni-kuru dwelt in the palace of Sakaki-bara at Karu, ¹¹⁴¹ and ruled the Empire. This heavenly Sovereign wedded Her Augustness Utsu-shiko-me, ¹¹⁴² younger sister of His Augustness Utsu-shiko-wo, ¹¹⁴³ ancestor of the Grandees of Hodzumi, ¹¹⁴⁴ and begot august children: His Augustness Oho-biko, ¹¹⁴⁵ next His Augustness Sukuna-biko-take-wi-goro; ¹¹⁴⁶ next His Augustness Waka-yamato-ne-ko-hiko-oho-bibi ¹¹⁴⁷ (three Deities). Again, wedding Her Augustness I-gaka-shiko-me, ¹¹⁴⁸ daughter of His Augustness Utsu-shiko-wo, he begot an august child: His Augustness Hiko-futu-oshi-no-makoto. ¹¹⁴⁹ Again, wedding Princess Haniyasu, ¹¹⁵⁰ daughter of Awotama ¹¹⁵¹ of Kafuchi, he begot an august child: His Augustness Take-hani-yasu-biko ¹¹⁵² (one Deity). The august children of this Heavenly Sovereign [numbered in all five Deities]. So His Augustness Waka-yamato-ne-ko-hiko-oho-bibi [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. The children of his elder brother, His Augustness Oho-biko, were His Augustness Take-numa-kaha-wake ¹¹⁵³ (ancestor of the Grandees of Abe); ¹¹⁵⁴ next His Augustness Hiko-inakoshi-wake ¹¹⁵⁵ (This was the ancestor of the Butler Grandees.) ¹¹⁵⁶ His Augustness Hiko-futu-oshi-no-mikoto wedded Princess Takachina of Kadzuraki, ¹¹⁵⁷ young sister of Cho-nabi, ¹¹⁵⁸ ancestor of the Chiefs of Wohari, ¹¹⁵⁹ and begot a child: the Noble Umashi Uchi. ¹¹⁶⁰ (This was the ancestor of the Grandees of Uchi in Yamashiro.) ¹¹⁶¹ Again, wedding Princess Yamashita-kage, ¹¹⁶² younger sister of Udzu-hiko, ¹¹⁶³ ancestor of the Rulers of the Lord of ¹¹⁴¹ In Yamato. For Karu see Sect. LVII, Note I. Sakahi-bara signifies "boundary moor."

¹¹⁴² I.e., perhaps, "the beautiful but alarming female."

¹¹⁴³ I.e., perhaps, "the beautiful but alarming male."

¹¹⁴⁴ Hodzumi no omi. There are several places called Hodzumi in various provinces. The name appears to signify "piling up rice-ears."

¹¹⁴⁵ I.e., "great prince."

¹¹⁴⁶ I.e., "little prince-fierce-boar-heart," the boar being known for its savage disposition.

¹¹⁴⁷ Excluding the last member of the compound, this name signifies "young-Yamato-lord-prince-great" Bibi is identified by Motowori with the word mimi, which so often recurs in proper names (see Sect. XIII, Note 18).

¹¹⁴⁸ Motowori explains this name in the sense of "brilliant-alarming-female," but some doubt must attach to it.

¹¹⁴⁹ I.e., perhaps, "prince vast-great-truth."

¹¹⁵⁰ Hani-yasu-bime. This name has already been met with in Sect. VII, Note 3. Motowori however supposes that in this place Haniyasu should be considered to be the name of a place in Yamato.

¹¹⁵¹ I.e., a man called "green jewel" who lived in the province of Kafuchi.

¹¹⁵² Take signifies "brave." For the rest of the name see Note 10.

¹¹⁵³ Take signifies "brave." Wake is either "young" or "lord." For Nuna-kaha see Sect. LI, Note 31.

¹¹⁵⁴ Abe no omi. There are several places called Abe, and it is doubtful to which of them the text here refers.

¹¹⁵⁵ The signification of inakoshi seems to be "rice-chariot". Hiko is "prince," and wake either "young" or "lord."

¹¹⁵⁷ Katsuraki-no-takachina-bime-no-mikoto. The signification of Takachina is obscure.

¹¹⁵⁸ By aphaeresis for Oho-inabi, the form of the name given in the "Chronicles of Old Matters of Former Ages." itself perhaps standing by apocope for Oho-ina-biko, which would signify "great rice-prince."

¹¹⁵⁹ Wohari no Murazhi.

¹¹⁶⁰ Umashi Uchi no sukune. Umashi signifies "sweet," and Uchi is the name of a place in Yamashiro.

¹¹⁶¹ Yamashiro no Uchi no omi.

¹¹⁶² This name may be rendered literally "the shade beneath the mountains," but the signification is "the glow from the autumn leaves on the mountain-side."

¹¹⁶³ I.e., probably "wonderful (or precious) prince."

Ki, ¹¹⁶⁴ he begot a child, the Noble Take-Uchi ¹¹⁶⁵ The children of this Noble Take-Uchi [numbered] in all nine (seven males and two females),— namely] the Noble of Hata-no-Yashiro, ¹¹⁶⁶ [who] (was the ancestor of the Grandees of Hata, ¹¹⁶⁷ of the Grandees of Hayashi, ¹¹⁶⁸ of the Grandees of Hami, ¹¹⁶⁹ of the Grandees of Hoshikaha, ¹¹⁷⁰ of the Grandees of Afumi, ¹¹⁷¹ and of the Dukes of the Hatsuse Tribe); ¹¹⁷² next the Noble Kose-no-Wo-Kara ¹¹⁷³ [who] (was the ancestor of the Grandees of Kose, ¹¹⁷⁴ of the Grandees of the Sazaki Tribe, ¹¹⁷⁵ and of the Grandees of the Karu Tribe); ¹¹⁷⁶ next the Noble Soga no Ishikaha ¹¹⁷⁷ [who] (was the ancestor of the Grandees of Soga, ¹¹⁷⁸ of the Grandees of Kahanobe, ¹¹⁷⁹ of the Grandees of Tanaka, ¹¹⁸⁰ of the Grandees of Takamuko, ¹¹⁸¹ of the Grandees of Woharida ¹¹⁸² of the Grandees of Sakurawi, ¹¹⁸³ and of the Grandees of Kishida); ¹¹⁸⁴ next the Noble Heguri-no-Tsuku, ¹¹⁸⁵ [who] (was the ancestor of the Grandees of Heguri, ¹¹⁸⁶ of the Grandees of Sawara, ¹¹⁸⁷ and of the Uma-mi-kuhi Chiefs) ¹¹⁸⁸ next the Noble Kino-Tsunu ¹¹⁸⁹ [who] (was the ancestor of the Grandees of Ki, ¹¹⁹⁰ of the Grandees of Tsumu; ¹¹⁹¹ and of the Grandees of Sakamoto) ¹¹⁹² next ¹¹⁶⁴ Ki no kuni no miyatsuko no aya.

¹¹⁶⁵ Take-Uchi no sukune. Take signifies "brave," and Uchi is the name of a district in Yamato. The common, but erroneous, reading of this name is Take no Uchi no sukune. The celebrated personage, who may be styled the Methuselah of Japan, is said to have lived during the reigns of five Emperors, who themselves averaged over a hundred years of life each. His own age is variously given as 255, 260, etc. up to 360 years.

¹¹⁶⁶ Hata no Yashiro no sukune. Hata and Yashiro are supposed by Motowori to be the names of places in Yamato. Yashiro signifies "shrine." Hata is of uncertain derivation.

¹¹⁶⁷ Hata no omi.

¹¹⁶⁸ Hayashi no omi. Hayashi is the name of a place in Kawachi, and signifies "forest."

¹¹⁶⁹ Hami no omi. There is a Hami in Afumi and another in Tamba. The signification of the name is obscure.

¹¹⁷⁰ Hoshikaha no omi. Hoshikaha is a place in Yamato. The name signifies "star river."

¹¹⁷¹ Afumi no omi. For Afumi see Sect. XXIX, Note 20.

¹¹⁷² Hatsuse-be no Kimi. For Hatsuse see Sect. CXLIII, Note 8.

¹¹⁷³ Kose no Wo-kara no sukune. Kose is the name of a place in Yamato. The meaning of Wo-kara is obscure.

¹¹⁷⁴ Kose no omi.

¹¹⁷⁵ Sazakibe no omi. See Sect. LIII, Note 10.

¹¹⁷⁶ Kurube no omi.

¹¹⁷⁷ Soga no Ishikaha no sukune. Soga is a place in Yamato, and Ishikaha a district in Kahachi. In cases like this it must generally be presumed that the family had two seats, or was divided into two branches residing in different places. Sometimes, however, the original seat and that to which the family afterwards removed are meant to be indicated.

¹¹⁷⁸ Soga no omi. The signification of Soga is obscure.

¹¹⁷⁹ Kahanobe no omi. Kahanobe is the name of a district in Settsu, and signifies "river-bank."

¹¹⁸⁰ Tanaka no omi. Tanaka is the name of a place in Yamato and signifies "among the rice-fields."

¹¹⁸¹ Takamuko no omi. Takamuko seems to be the name of a place in Echizen. Its signification is uncertain.

¹¹⁸² Woharida no omi. Woharida is a place in Yamato. The name seems to mean "little ploughed field."

¹¹⁸³ Sakurawi no omi. Sakurawi is the name of a place in Kahachi and signifies "cherry-tree well."

¹¹⁸⁴ Kishida no omi. Kishida is a place in Yamato. The signification of the name is not clear.

¹¹⁸⁵ Heguri no Tsuku no sukune. Heguri is the name of a district in Yamato, and is of uncertain signification. Tsuku (modern dzuku), "owl," is a name which is referred to a tradition that will be found in Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXII, p. 29.

¹¹⁸⁶ Heguri no omi.

¹¹⁸⁷ Sawara no omi. Sawara was perhaps a district in Chikuzen. The signification of the name is obscure.

¹¹⁸⁸ Uma mi-kuhi no murazhi. The literal significance of the characters with which Uma-mi-kuhi is written is "horse august post." But whether this name had any relation to horses, or whether it should simply be regarded as the name of a place is quite uncertain.

¹¹⁸⁹ Ki no Tsunu no sukune. Ki is the name of a province, and p. 204 Tsunu that of a district in another province,—the province of Suhau (Suwō). Conf. Note 37.

¹¹⁹⁰ Ki no omi.

Princess Mato of Kume; ¹¹⁹³ next Princess Nu-no-iro; ¹¹⁹⁴ next Kadzuraki-no-Nagaye-no-sotsu-biko ¹¹⁹⁵ [who] (was the ancestor of the Grandees of Tamade, ¹¹⁹⁶ of the Grandees of Ikuha, ¹¹⁹⁷ of the Grandees of Ikuye ¹¹⁹⁸ and of the Grandees of Agina), ¹¹⁹⁹ moreover [there was] the Noble Waku-go ¹²⁰⁰ (the ancestor of the Grandees of Yenuma). ¹²⁰¹ This Heavenly Sovereign's august years were fifty-seven. His august mausoleum is on the mound in the middle of the Pool of Tsurugi. ¹²⁰²

¹¹⁹¹ Tsunu no omi.

¹¹⁹² Sakamoto no omi. Sakamoto is the name of a place in Idzumi and signifies "base of the hill."

¹¹⁹³ Kume no Ma-ito-hime. Kume may be, as Motowori says, the name of a place. But see Sect. XXXIV, Note 7. In any case the place, if it existed, was probably called after some person of the name of Kume. The signification of Ma-iro is obscure.

¹¹⁹⁴ Nu-no-iro-hime. The meaning of this name is obscure.

¹¹⁹⁵ Kadzuraki is the already frequently mentioned name of a district in Yamato, and Nagaye is likewise the name of a place,—whether in Yamato or in Kahachi is not certain. It signifies "long inlet." Motowori thinks that the syllable so in this place is the same as the of kuma-so, and signifies "valiant" or "fierce."

¹¹⁹⁶ Tamade no omi. There is a Tamade in Yamato and another in Kahachi. The signification of the name is uncertain.

¹¹⁹⁷ Ikuha no omi. The "Chronicles of Japan" tell us that the original form of this name Ikuha was uki-ha, i.e., "floating leaf," and give a story to account for it. See Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXII, pp. 36-37, where the reason traditionally given to explain the fact of the name Ikuha being written with the character 浮 is also mentioned at length.

¹¹⁹⁸ Ikuye no omi. Ikuye must have been the name of a place; but nothing is known of it.

¹¹⁹⁹ Agina no anti. The same observation applies to this as to the preceding name.

¹²⁰⁰ Waku-go no sukune. Waku-go signifies "young child" or "youth," an Honorific designation.

¹²⁰¹ Yenuma no omi. Yenuma is the name of a district in Kaga, and signifies "inlet-lagoon."

¹²⁰² In Yamato. This pool or lake is often mentioned in the poems of the "Collection of a Myriad Leaves" and was celebrated for its lotus-flowers. We hear of it in the "Chronicles of Japan," as having been dug in the reign of the Emperor Ō-jin, but it was probably, like many others, a natural pool or marsh, which was afterwards improved. The name signifies "sabre."

SECTION LXII.—EMPEROR KAI-KUWA

His Augustness Waka-yamato-ne-ko-hiko-ōho-bibi dwelt in the palace of Izakaha at Kasuga, ¹²⁰³ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded the Princess of Takanu, ¹²⁰⁴ daughter of Yugori ¹²⁰⁵ the Great Departmental Lord of Taniha, ¹²⁰⁶ and begot an august child: His Augustness Hiko-yumusumi, ¹²⁰⁷ (one Deity). Again he wedded his step-mother, Her Augustness I-gaka-shiko-me, ¹²⁰⁸ and begot august children: His Augustness Mima-kiri-biko-iniwe; ¹²⁰⁹ next Her Augustness Mima-tsumihime ¹²¹⁰ (two Deities). Again he wedded Her Augustness Oke-tsu-hime, ¹²¹¹ younger sister of His Augustness Hiko-kuni-oketsu, ¹²¹² ancestor of the Grandees of Wani, ¹²¹³ and begot an august child: King Hiko-imasu ¹²¹⁴ (one Deity). Again, wedding Princess Washi, ¹²¹⁵ daughter of the Noble Kadzuraki-no-tarumi, ¹²¹⁶ he begot an august child,—King Take-tayo-hadzura-wake ¹²¹⁷ (one Deity); The august children of this Heavenly Sovereign [numbered] in all five Deities (four Kings and one Queen), So His Augustness Mi-maki-iri-biko-iniwe [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. The children of his elder brother, King Hiko-yumusumi were: King Oho-tsutsuki-tari-ne; ¹²¹⁸ next King Sanugi-tari-ne ¹²¹⁹ (two Kings). There were five Deities daughters of these two Kings. Next King Hiko-imasu wedded the Princess of Yena in Yamashiro, ¹²²⁰ another name for whom was Kari-bata-tobe, ¹²²¹ and begot children: King Ohō-mata; ¹²²² next King Wo-mata; ¹²²³ next King Noble [of?] Shibumi ¹²²⁴ (three ¹²⁰³ For Kasuga see Sect. LVIII, Note 7. Izakaha is a place in Yamato. The signification of the name is uncertain.

¹²⁰⁴ Takanu-hime. Takanu is the name of a district in Tango, and signifies "bamboo moor."

¹²⁰⁵ The signification of this name is quite obscure.

¹²⁰⁶ Taniha no oho-agata-nushi. Taniha (modern Tamba) is the name of a province (formerly including the province of Tango) in Central Japan. It is supposed to mean "the place of rice-fields," the rice offered at the shrine of the Sun-Goddess in Ise being brought thence.

¹²⁰⁷ Hiko signifies "prince." The other syllables of the name are obscure.

¹²⁰⁸ See Sect. LXI, Note 8.

¹²⁰⁹ Biko (hiko) signifies "prince." The other elements of this compound are obscure.

¹²¹⁰ One is tempted to render this name by Princess of Mima. But there is no authority for regarding Mima either in this or in the preceding personal name as originally the name of a place.

¹²¹¹ Motowori has no explanation to offer of the syllables Oke-tsu. Hime means "princess."

¹²¹² Hiko means "prince" and kuni means "country."

¹²¹³ Wani no omi. Wani is a place in Yamato, and there is a pass or hill of that name (Wani-zaka). The only signification belonging to the word wani is "crocodile."

¹²¹⁴ Hiko-imasu no miko. Signification obscure.

¹²¹⁵ Or "the Princess of Washi" or "the Eagle Princess." In Japanese Washihime.

¹²¹⁶ Kadzuraki is the name of a district in Yamato, and Motowori believes Tarumi to be the name of a place in Settsu.

¹²¹⁷ Take-toyo-hadzura-wake no miko. The first two elements of the compound signify respectively "brave" and "luxuriant" while the last probably means "lord." The signification of hadzura is obscure.

¹²¹⁸ Oho-tsutsuki-tari-ne no miko. Tsutsuki being the name of a district in Yamashiro, the whole compound signifies "prince great sufficing lord of great Tsutsuki."

¹²¹⁹ Sanugi-tari-ne no miko, i.e., "prince sufficing lord of Sanugi," (Sanuki,—see Sect. V, Note 6).

¹²²⁰ Yamashiro no Yena tsu Hime. Yamashiro is the name of a province, and Yena that of a place in Settsu. The signification of the latter name is obscure.

¹²²¹ Motowori believes Karibata to be the name of a place, and tobe (to-me) to signify "old woman," as in the name Ishi-ko-ri-do-me, which latter is however extremely obscure (see Sect. XVI, Note 12).

¹²²² Oho-mata no miko. The signification of this name and of the parallel name of the younger brother is obscure.

¹²²³ Wo-mata no miko.

¹²²⁴ Shibumi no Sukune no miko. Shibumi is probably the name of a place, there being a Shibumi in Ise.

Deities). Again, wedding Saho-no-oho-kurami-tome, ¹²²⁵ daughter of Take-kuni-katsu-tome, of Kasuga, ¹²²⁶ he begot children: King Saho-biko; ¹²²⁷ next King Wō-zaho; ¹²²⁸ next Her Augustness Saho-bime, ¹²²⁹ another name for whom is Sahaji-hime ¹²³⁰ (Her Augustness Saho-bime here mentioned was consort of the Heavenly Sovereign Ikume); ¹²³¹ and King Muro-biko, ¹²³² (four Deities). Again, wedding Okinaga-no-midzu-yori-hime, ¹²³³ daughter of the Heavenly Deity Mikage, ¹²³⁴ who is held in reverence by the deacons of Mikami in Chika-tsu-Afumi, ¹²³⁵ he begot children: King Tatatsu-michi-no-ushi, Prince of Taniha; ¹²³⁶ next King Midzuho-no-ma-wa-ka; ¹²³⁷ next King Kamu-oho-ne, ¹²³⁸ another name for whom is King Yatsuri-iri-biko; ¹²³⁹ next Midzuho-no-i-ho-yori-hime; ¹²⁴⁰ next Mimi-tsu-hime; ¹²⁴¹ (three Deities). Again, wedding his mother's younger sister Her Augustness Woke-tsu-hime, ¹²⁴² he begot children: King Ma-wata of Oho-tsutsuki in Yamashiro; ¹²⁴³ next King Hiko-osu; ¹²⁴⁴ next king Iri-ne ¹²⁴⁵ (two Deities). Altogether the children of King Hiko-imasu [numbered] in all eleven Kings. So the children of the elder brother King Oho, mata were: King Ake-tatsu; ¹²⁴⁶ next King Unakami ¹²⁴⁷ (two Deities). This King Ake-tatsu (was the ancestor ¹²²⁵ Saho is the name of a well-known place in Yamato, and Kurami is supposed by Motowori to be the name of a place in Wakasa. Oho means "great," and tome, according to Motowori, means "old woman" or simply "female." Conf. Note 19.

¹²²⁶ Kasuga no Take-kuni-katsu-tome. Motowori supposes this to be the name, not of the father, but the mother of the princess just mentioned. Take signifies "brave," and kuni "land." The meaning of katsu is obscure.

¹²²⁷ Saho-biko no miko, i.e., "Prince of Saho."

¹²²⁸ Wō-zaho no miko, i.e., "little (q.d. 'younger') prince of Saho."

¹²²⁹ i.e., the princess of Saho.

¹²³⁰ It is uncertain whether we should understand this name to signify "princess Sahaji" or "the princess of Sahaji," but the latter seems the more probable.

¹²³¹ i.e., the Emperor Sui-nin.

¹²³² More-biko no miko. Muro-biko signifies "Prince of Muro." Muro being a place in Yamato. It signifies "dwelling" and specially "cave."

¹²³³ i.e., "flourishing and good princess of Okinaga," the latter being the name of a place in Afumi (Omi). Its signification is not clear.

¹²³⁴ Ame no Mikaga no kami. The signification of Mikaga is obscure, as is also the connection between this deity and the deacons of Mikami.

¹²³⁵ The signification of the name Mikami is obscure. The word rendered "deacon" is hufuri, the name of an inferior class of Shinto priests. See for a discussion of the etymology of the word, etc., Mr. Satow's remarks on p. 112 of Vol. VII of these Transactions. For Chika-tsu-Afumi see Sect. XXIX, Note 20.

¹²³⁶ Tanika no hiko Tatatsu-michi-no-ushi no miko. The signification of Tatatsu is obscure, but we may accept it as the personal name of the worthy here mentioned. Michi-no-ushi means "master of the road," i.e. "lord of the province."

¹²³⁷ Midzuho no ma-waka no miko, i.e. "the True Young King of Midzuho," Midzuho being the name of a place in Afumi. It probably means "fresh young rice-ears."

¹²³⁸ Kamu-oho-ne no miko, i.e., probably, "prince divine great lord."

¹²³⁹ Yatsuri-iri-biko no miko. Yatsuri is the name of a village in Yamato, and is of uncertain origin. The signification of iri obscure.

¹²⁴⁰ I-ho signifies "five hundred" and yori probably signifies "good." The compound may therefore be taken to mean "manifoldly excellent princess of Midzuho."

¹²⁴¹ i.e., probably "the Princess Miwi" (Miwi-dera in Afumi). Mi-wi signifies "three wells."

¹²⁴² This name is parallel to that which has been commented on in Note 9 to this Section.

¹²⁴³ Yamashiro-no-oho-Tsutsuki no ma-waka no miko. All the elements of this compound have already appeared in this Section.

¹²⁴⁴ Hiko-osu no miko. The signification of osu is obscure, ¹²⁴⁵ Iri-ne no miko. Signification obscure.

¹²⁴⁶ Ake-tatsu no miko. See Sect. LXXII, Note 20.

of the Dukes of the Homuji Tribe in Ise ¹²⁴⁸ and of the Rulers of Sana in Ise) ¹²⁴⁹ King Una-kami (was the ancestor of the Dukes of Himeda. ¹²⁵⁰ The next King Wo-mata (was the ancestor of the Dukes of Magari in Tagima). ¹²⁵¹ The next King Noble Shibumi (was the ancestor of the Dukes of Sasa) ¹²⁵² The next King Saho-biko (was the ancestor of the Chiefs of the Kusaka Tribe ¹²⁵³ and of the Rulers of the Land of Kahi). ¹²⁵⁴ The next, King Wo-zaho (was the ancestor of the Lords of Kadzunu ¹²⁵⁵ and the Lords of Kanu in Chika-tsu-Afumi.) ¹²⁵⁶ The next King Muro-biko (was the ancestor of the Lords of Mimi in Wakasa.). ¹²⁵⁷ King Michi-no-ushi wedded the Lady Masu of Kahakami in Taniha, ¹²⁵⁸ and begot children: Her Augustness Princess Hibasu; ¹²⁵⁹ next Her Augustness Princess Matonu; ¹²⁶⁰ next Her Augustness Oto-hime; ¹²⁶¹ next King Mikado-wake ¹²⁶² (four Deities). This King Mikado-wake (was the ancestor of the Lords of Ho in Mikaha). ¹²⁶³ Prince Midzuho-no-ma-waka, younger brother of this King Michi-no-ushi, (was the ancestor of the Suzerains of Yasu in Chika-tsu-Afumi). ¹²⁶⁴ The next, King Kamu-oho-be (was the ancestor of the [Rulers of] the Land of Minu, ¹²⁶⁵ of the Rulers of the land of Motosu, ¹²⁶⁶ and of the Chiefs of the Nagahata Tribe) ¹²⁶⁷ The next, King Mawaka of Oho-tsutsuki in Yama-shiro wedded Princess Ajisaha of Mone, ¹²⁶⁸ daughter of his younger brother Irine, and begot a child: King Kami-me-ikadzuchi. ¹²⁶⁹ This King wedded Princess Takaki, ¹²⁷⁰ daughter of the Grandee Tohotsu of Taniha ¹²⁷¹ and begot ¹²⁴⁷ Unakami no miko. See Sect. LXXII, Note 19.

¹²⁴⁸ Ise no Homuji-be no kimi. See the mention of the establishment of this Clan at the end of Sect. LXXII.

¹²⁴⁹ Ise no Sana no miyatsuko. The etymology of Sana is obscure.

¹²⁵⁰ Himeda no kimi. Himeda is a place in Afumi. The signification of the name is obscure.

¹²⁵¹ Tagima no Magari no kimi. Tagima is the name of a district in Yamato, and is of uncertain origin. Magari is the name of a place, and means "crook" or "bend."

¹²⁵² Sasa no kimi. Sasa is the name of a place in Iga, and is of uncertain signification.

¹²⁵³ Kusakabe no murazhi.

¹²⁵⁴ Kahi no kuni no miyatsuko. For Kahi see Sect. LXXXVI, Note 1.

¹²⁵⁵ Kadzunu no wake. Kadzunu is the name of a district in Yamashiro, and signifies "pueraria moor."

¹²⁵⁶ Chika-tsu-Afumi no Kanu no wake. Kanu is a village in Afumi. The name is written with characters signifying "mosquito moor."

¹²⁵⁷ Wakasa no Mimi no wake. Mimi is the name of a village, and is of uncertain signification.

¹²⁵⁸ Taniha no Kahakami no Masu no iratsume. Masu is of uncertain derivation. Kahakami is the name of a village, now comprised in the province of Tango. It signifies "river-land."

¹²⁵⁹ Hibasu-hime. The signification of this name is obscure.

¹²⁶⁰ Matonu-hime. The signification of this name is obscure.

¹²⁶¹ I.e., "the younger princess."

¹²⁶² This name, which is written 朝廷別王, is curious, and Motowori has no suggestion to make touching its interpretation.

¹²⁶³ Mikaha no Ho no wake. Ho is the name of a district, and is of obscure derivation. Mikaha is the name of a maritime province. It signifies "three rivers," with reference to two large rivers which flow through it and to another which forms the boundary between it and the province of Wohari.

¹²⁶⁴ Chika-tsu-Afumi no Yasu no atahe. Yasu is the name of a district, and is of uncertain origin.

¹²⁶⁵ Minu no kuni no [miyatsuko]. The word miyatsuko, which is not in the text, is supplied in Motowori's kana reading.

¹²⁶⁶ Motosu no kuni no miyatsuko. Motosu is the name of a district in Mino, and seems to signify "original dwelling-place."

¹²⁶⁷ Nagahata-be no murazhi. Nagahata is the name of a place in Hitachi, and seems to signify "long loom."

¹²⁶⁸ Mone no Ajisaha-bime. This name is particularly obscure, and Mone probably corrupt.

¹²⁶⁹ Kani-me-ikadzuchi no miko. Motowori thinks that this name signifies "fierce like a crab's eye," with reference perhaps to some personal peculiarity of the prince who bore it.

¹²⁷⁰ Takaki-hime. This name is obscure and perhaps corrupt.

¹²⁷¹ Taniha no Tohotsu omi. This name is obscure.

a child: King Noble Okinaga.¹²⁷² This king wedded the Princess of Takanuka in Kadzuraki,¹²⁷³ and begot children: Her Augustness Princess Okinaga-tarashi¹²⁷⁴ next Her Augustness Sora-tsu-hime;¹²⁷⁵ next King Prince Okinaga¹²⁷⁶ (three Deities. This King was the ancestor of the Dukes of Homuji in Kibi,¹²⁷⁷ and of the Dukes of Aso in Harima).¹²⁷⁸ Again King Noble Okinaga wedded Princess Inayori of Kahamata¹²⁷⁹ and begot a child: King Oho-tama-saka¹²⁸⁰ (This was the ancestor of the Rulers of the land of Tajima).¹²⁸¹ The above-mentioned Take-toyo-hadzu-ra-wake (was the ancestor of the Grantees of Chimori,¹²⁸² of the Rulers of the Oshinumi Tribe,¹²⁸³ of the Rulers of the Mima Tribe,¹²⁸⁴ of the Oshinumi Tribe in Inaba,¹²⁸⁵ of the Lords of Takanu in Taniba,¹²⁸⁶ and of the Abiko of Yosami).¹²⁸⁷ The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were sixty-three. His august mausoleum is at the top of the hill of Izakaha.¹²⁸⁸ ¹²⁷² Okinaga no sukune no miko. For Okinaga see Note 31 to this Section.

¹²⁷³ Kadzuraki no Takanuka-hime. Takanuka is the name of a place in Yamato. It is written with characters signifying "high brow."

¹²⁷⁴ Okinaga-tarashi-hime. Okinaga is the name of a place (see Note 31). Tarashi is an honorific designation, signifying literally "sufficient," i.e., "perfect," and is supposed by Motowori to have been bestowed after death on this princess, who was the celebrated conqueror of Korea, and is better known to fame by her "canonical name" of Jingō Kōgō.

¹²⁷⁵ I.e., "the princess of the sky."

¹²⁷⁶ Okinaga-hiko no miko.

¹²⁷⁷ Kibi no Homuji no kimi. Homuji is the name of a district in the modern province of Bingo, and may perhaps be of Chinese origin.

¹²⁷⁸ Harima no Aso no kimi. Aso is the name of a place, and is of uncertain origin.

¹²⁷⁹ Kahamata no Ina-yori-hime. Kahamata ("river-fork") is the name of a place in Kohachi. Ina signifies "rice," and *yor*i probably signifies "good" in this and numerous other proper names.

¹²⁸⁰ Oho-tamu-saka no miko. This name is obscure. Motowori thinks that Tamu-saka may be the name of a place, and signifying "winding ascent."

¹²⁸¹ Tajima no kuni no miyatsuko. For Tajima see Sect. LXXIV, Note 1.

¹²⁸² Chi-mori no omi. Chi-mori signifies "road-keeper," and perhaps we should translate this "gentile name," by "road-keeping grantees," and suppose that anciently they may have performed some functions in which the bestowal of it originated.

¹²⁸³ Oshinumi-be no miyatsuko. Oshinumi is the name of a district in Yamato, and is of uncertain import.

¹²⁸⁴ Mina-be no miyatsuko. Perhaps we should rather translate thus, "the Rulers of Minabe," for the name is altogether obscure.

¹²⁸⁵ Inaba no Oshinumi-be. Motowori supposes a branch of this family, which was originally established in Yamato, to have removed to the province of Inaba.

¹²⁸⁶ Taniha no Takanu no wake. Takanu is the name of a district in the modern province of Tango. It signifies "high moor."

¹²⁸⁷ Yosami no obiko. Yosami is the name of a place in Kahachi and is of uncertain origin, though the legends connect with the word and, "a net" (see Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXII, p. 81). It is chiefly known on account of its lake or pool, which is often mentioned in the early poetry. Abiko is a very rare "gentile name," which in the "Catalogue of Family Names" is written with the characters 我孫, but is derived by Motowori from 吾彦, i.e., "my grandchildren."

¹²⁸⁸ In Yamato. The name is of uncertain origin.

SECTION LXIII.—EMPEROR SŪ-JIN (PART I.— GENEALOGIES)

His Augustness Mima-ki-iri-biko-iniwe dwelt at the Palace of Midzu-gaki at Shiki,¹²⁸⁹ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded Tohotsu-no-ayu-me-me-kuhashi,¹²⁹⁰ daughter of Arakaha-to-be,¹²⁹¹ Ruler of the land of Ki,¹²⁹² and begot august children: His Augustness Toyo-ki-iri-biko,¹²⁹³ and next Her Augustness Toyo-suki-iri-bime¹²⁹⁴ (two Deities). Again, wedding the Great Princess of Ama,¹²⁹⁵ ancestress of the Chiefs of Wohori,¹²⁹⁶ he begot august children: His Augustness Oho-iri-ki;¹²⁹⁷ next His Augustness Ya-saka-no-iri-biko; next Her Augustness Nuna-ki-no-iri-bime; next Her Augustness Towochi-no-iri-bime¹²⁹⁸ (four Deities). Again, wedding Her Augustness Princess Mimatsu,¹²⁹⁹ daughter of His Augustness Oho-biko, he begot august children: His Augustness Ikume-iri-biko-isachi¹³⁰⁰ next His Augustness Iza-no-ma-waka;¹³⁰¹ next Her Augustness Princess Kuni-kata;¹³⁰² next Her Augustness Princess Chiji-tsuku-yamato;¹³⁰³ next Her Augustness Princess Iga;¹³⁰⁴ next His Augustness Yamato-Hiko¹³⁰⁵ (six Deities). The august children of this Heavenly Sovereign [numbered] in all twelve Deities (seven Kings and Queens). So His Augustness Ikume-iri-biko-isachi [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. The next, His Augustness Toyo-ki-iri-biko (was the ancestor [of the Dukes] of Kami-tsu ke-nu,¹³⁰⁶ and the Dukes of Shimo-tsu-ke-nu).¹³⁰⁷ The younger sister, Her ¹²⁸⁹ In Yamato. Shiki probably signifies "stone castle" (ishi-ki). Midzugaki signifies "fresh young hedge,"—an Honorific designation of the hedge round the Emperor's abode, which passed into a Proper Name.

¹²⁹⁰ According to Motowori's exegesis, this name is a rather remarkable instance of verbal usage, ayu-me ("trout-eyes") being not properly part of the name at all, but only a Pillow-Word for what follows, viz., Me-kakushi-hime, i.e. "Princess Beautiful Eyes." Tohotsu is the name of a place in the province of Ki, signifying "far harbour."

¹²⁹¹ Arakaha is the name of a place in Ki, and signifies "rough (i.e. impetuous and dangerous) river." The syllables to-be are of uncertain import.

¹²⁹² Ki no kuni no miyatsuko.

¹²⁹³ Toyo signifies "luxuriant" and biko (hiko) "prince." The other elements of the compound are obscure.

¹²⁹⁴ Bime (hime) signifies "princess," and suki is identified by Motowori with Shiki, the name of the residence of the monarch whose daughter this princess was.

¹²⁹⁵ Oho-ama-hime. Ama is the name of a district in Wohari, and probably signifies "fisherman."

¹²⁹⁶ Wohari no murazhi.

¹²⁹⁷ The signification of this and the two following names is uncertain.

¹²⁹⁸ Towochi is the name of a district in Yamato.

¹²⁹⁹ Mimatsu-hime. Signification uncertain.

¹³⁰⁰ Signification uncertain.

¹³⁰¹ The syllables ma and waka, literally "true and young" or "truly young" are honorific. Iza is of doubtful signification.

¹³⁰² Kuni-kata-hime. Kuni means "country," and kata here probably signifies "hard" or "firm."

¹³⁰³ Ohiji-tsuku-yamato-hime. Ohiji probably means "a thousand," and Yamato is the name of a province. Tsuku is obscure.

¹³⁰⁴ Iga-hime. Iga is the name of a district and of a province (see Sect. LVI, Note 9).

¹³⁰⁵ i.e., "Yamato Prince."

¹³⁰⁶ Kami-tsu-ke-nu [no kimi]. The character 君 (Dukes) is supplied by Motowori. This is the ancient form of the name now pronounced Kōdzuke (conf. Shimo-tsu-ke-nu corrupted to Shimotsuke). The author of the "Inquiry into the Meaning of the Names of All the Provinces" draws attention to the curious fact that, whereas the final syllable nu of the original word is dropped in speaking, it is the ke which is dropped in writing—the original form of the name, as written, being 上毛野, whereas now only the first two of these three characters are used. Its signification is supposed to be "upper vegetation-moor," ke (毛) being regarded as

Augustness Princess Toyo-Suki (was high-priestess of ¹³⁰⁸ the temple of the Great Deity of Ise.) ¹³⁰⁹ The next brother, His Augustness Oho-iri-ki (was ancestor of the Grandees of Noto). ¹³¹⁰ The next, His Augustness Yamato-hiko,—(in the time of this King a hedge of men was the first time set in the mausoleum). ¹³¹¹ the Archaic general term for trees and grasses, identical with ke that means "hairs," vegetation having struck the early speakers of the language as being similar to the hairs on the bodies of men and beasts.

¹³⁰⁷ Shimo-tsu-ke-nu no kimi. Shimo means "lower." For the rest of the name see preceding Note. Both names are those of provinces in Eastern Japan.

¹³⁰⁸ Or more literally, "worshipped and celebrated the festivals at," etc.

¹³⁰⁹ Viz., of the Sun-Goddess (Ama-terasu).

¹³¹⁰ Noto no omi. Noto, formerly a part of the province of Echizen, is the name of the peninsula that juts out into the Sea of Japan on the western coast of the Main Island. The etymology of the name is obscure.

¹³¹¹ The meaning of this imperfectly formed sentence is: On the occasion of "the interment of the next prince, His Augustness Yamato-hiko, the custom of setting a row of the deceased prince's retainers round his grave and burying them alive was first introduced." For a further notice of this custom see Sect. LXXV, Note 4. According to the "Chronicles," the "ancient" custom of burying retainers up to their necks in the neighbourhood of their lord's grave was abolished after this very same interment. Motowori endeavours to reconcile the two statements by supposing that the custom was really an old one, but that on the occasion here mentioned the number of victims was increased to an unprecedented degree, so that, as related in the "Chronicles," their cries, while their heads were being pulled to pieces by the crows and dogs, filled the Emperor with commiseration.

SECTION LXIV.—EMPEROR SŪ-JIN (PART II.—A PESTILENCE IS STAID BY OHO-TATA-NE-KO)

In the reign of this Heavenly Sovereign a great pestilence arose, and the people died as if none were to be left. ¹³¹² Then the Heavenly Sovereign grieved and lamented, and at night, while on his divine couch, ¹³¹³ there appeared [to him] in an august dream the Great Deity the Great-Master-of-Things, ¹³¹⁴ and said: "This is my august doing. ¹³¹⁵ So if thou wilt cause me to be worshipped ¹³¹⁶ by Oho-tata-ne-ko, ¹³¹⁷ the divine spirit shall not arise, ¹³¹⁸ and the land will be tranquillized." When, therefore, couriers ¹³¹⁹ were dispatched in every direction ¹³²⁰ to search for the person [named] Oho-tata-ne-ko, he was discovered in the village of Minu ¹³²¹ in Kafuchi, and was respectfully sent [to the Heavenly Sovereign]. ¹³²² Then the Heavenly Sovereign deigned to ask: "Whose child art thou?" He replied, saying: "I ¹³²³ am Oho-tats-ne-ko, child of His Augustness Take-mika-dzu-chi ¹³²⁴ [who was] child of His Augustness Ihi-gata-sumi, ¹³²⁵ [who was] child of His Augustness Kushi-mi-gata, ¹³²⁶ [who was] child of the Great Deity the Great-Master-of-Things by his wife Iku-tama-yori-bime, ¹³²⁷ daughter of His Augustness Suwe-tsu-mimi. ¹³²⁸ Hereupon the Heavenly Sovereign, being greatly rejoiced, commanded that the Empire should be tranquil, and the people flourish, and forthwith made His Augustness Oho-tata-ne-ko high priest ¹³²⁹ to worship ¹³³⁰ the Great Deity of Great Miwa ¹³³¹ on Mount Mimoro. ¹³³² Again he ordered His Augustness Igaka-shiko-

¹³¹² Literally, "about to be exhausted."

¹³¹³ This expression, which recurs at the commencement of Sect. CXLV, is difficult to explain. See Motowori's remarks in Vol. XXIII, pp. 24-25, and again in Vol. XL, pp. 14-15, of his Commentary.

¹³¹⁴ See Sect. LI, Note 12.

¹³¹⁵ Literally, "my august heart."

¹³¹⁶ Or, "cause my shrine to be worshipped at." The import of the god's words is that he wishes Oho-tata-ne-ko to be appointed chief priest of his temple. For the origin of this latter see the second half of Sect. XXXII (pp. 103-105).

¹³¹⁷ Oho signifies "great," Tata (or Tada) is taken to be the name of a place, and the syllables ne and ko are regarded as Honorifics. The whole name may therefore, though with some hesitation, be interpreted to mean "the Lord of the Great [Shrine of] Tata."

¹³¹⁸ I.e., "the divine anger shall no longer be kindled."

¹³¹⁹ Mounted couriers are almost certainly intended.

¹³²⁰ Literally, "distributed to the four sides,"—"four sides" being a Chinese phrase for every direction.

¹³²¹ This name may signify either "three moors" or "august moor." The village of Minu must not be confounded with the province of Minu.

¹³²² The characters used are those which properly denote the presenting of tribute to the Monarch.

¹³²³ Here and below the First Personal Pronoun is represented by the respectful character 僕, "servant."

¹³²⁴ See Sect. VIII, Note 7, for the explanation of this name. But probably the deity here intended is another.

¹³²⁵ The etymology and signification of 'this name are alike obscure.

¹³²⁶ Motowori interprets kushi in the sense of "wondrous," and Migata as the name of a place, which also occurs under the form of Higata.

¹³²⁷ I.e., "life-jewel-good-princess."

¹³²⁸ The precise signification of this name is obscure. Motowori supposes Suwe to be the name of a place; tsu is the Genitive Particle, and mimi the Honorific of doubtful import, whose meaning has been discussed in Note 18 to Sect. XIII.

¹³²⁹ The exact meaning of the characters used to write the word kayo-nushi (modern kamushi), here rendered "high-priest," is "owner of the Deity." Though commonly used in modern parlance to denote any Shinto priest, it properly signifies only the chief priest in charge of a temple, whence the odd-sounding name.

¹³³⁰ Or, "conduct the worship at the shrine of."

¹³³¹ Viz., the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land. For the traditional etymology of Miwa see the legend in Sect. LXV.

wo ¹³³³ to make eighty heavenly platters, and reverently to establish the shrines of the Earthly Deities; ¹³³⁴ likewise to worship with a red-coloured shield and spear the Deity of Sumi-saka ¹³³⁵ at Uda, and with a black-coloured shield and spear the Deity of Oho-sake; ¹³³⁶ likewise to present august offerings of cloth to all the Deities of the august declivities of the hills and to all the Deities of the reaches of the rivers, without neglecting any. ¹³³⁷ ¹³³⁸ In consequence of this the pestilential vapour ceased altogether, and the country was tranquillized.

¹³³² See Sect. XXVIII, Notes 4 and 5.

¹³³³ Or, Ikaga-shiko-wo. The probable meaning of this name, pro-posed by Motowori, is (neglecting the initial letter i as expletive) "the refulgent ugly male."

¹³³⁴ See Sect. I, Note 11 .

¹³³⁵ Sumisaka probably signifies "charcoal-hill." Uda, which has already been mentioned in Sect. XLVI, is in Yamato. This passage may equally well be rendered thus: "to present a red-coloured shield and spear to the Deity of Sumisaka," and similarly in the following clause. The meaning comes nearly to the same.

¹³³⁶ Literally, "great hill," or "great pass." It is at the boundary of the province of Yamato and Kahachi. Neither Motowori nor Tanigaha Shisei sanctions the view of the elder scholars, who fancied they saw in the distinction of red and black some mysterious import connected with the four cardinal points.

¹³³⁷ In the Old Printed Edition the text of this passage differs slightly from that adopted by Motowori; but the meaning is exactly the same.

¹³³⁸ A large lacuna here occurs in the "Old Printed Edition," in which the four hundred and forty-five Chinese characters forming the original of the following part of the translation, from the words, "In consequence of this" down to the words immediately preceding "Methinks this is a sign" on p. 180 are missing. Both the editor of 1687 and Motowori are silent as to the manner in which they supplied the deficiency; but it may be presumed from their silence that the MS. authorities furnished them with what had accidentally been omitted from the printed text.

SECTION LXV.—EMPEROR SŪ-JIN (PART III: STORY OF OHO-TATA-NE-KO'S BIRTH)

The reason why this person called Oho-tata-ne-ko was known to be a Deity's child, was that the above-mentioned Iku-tama-yori-bime was regularly beautiful, ¹³³⁹ whereupon a [divine ¹³⁴⁰] youth [who thought] the majesty of her appearance without comparison in the world, ¹³⁴¹ came suddenly to her in the middle of the night, So, as they loved each other and lived in matrimony together, the maiden ere long was pregnant. Then the father and mother, astonished at their daughter being pregnant, asked her, ¹³⁴² saying: "Thou art pregnant by thyself. How art thou with child without [having known] a man?" She replied, saying: I have naturally conceived through a beautiful young man, whose name ¹³⁴³ I know not, coming here every evening and staying with me." Therefore the father and mother, wishing to know the man, instructed their daughter, saying: "Sprinkle red earth in front of the couch, ¹³⁴⁴ and pass a skein of hemp through a needle, and pierce [therewith] the skirt of his garment." So she did as they had instructed, and, on looking in the morning, the hemp that had been put in the needle went out through the hole of the door-hook, ¹³⁴⁵ and all the hemp that remained was three twists ¹³⁴⁶ only. Then forthwith, knowing how he had gone out by the hook-hole, they went on their quest following the thread, which, reaching Mount Miwa, stopped at the shrine of the Deity, So they knew [that Oho-tata-neko was] the child of the Deity [residing] there. So the place was called by the name of Miwa on account of the three twists of hemp that had remained. (His Augustness Oho-tata-ne-ko, here referred to, was the ancestor of the Dukes of Miwa ¹³⁴⁷ and of the Dukes of Kamo.) ¹³⁴⁸

¹³³⁹ It is not easy to render literally into English the force of the characters 容姿端正, containing this description of the maiden's beauty, and of 形姿威儀, in the next clause. But it is hoped that at least the translation represents them better than do Motowori's readings kaho yokariki and kaho sugata.

¹³⁴⁰ This word, which is not in most texts, was supplied by the editor of 1687, and is adopted by Motowori on apparently satisfactory grounds.

¹³⁴¹ Literally, "in the time."

¹³⁴² The text places the word "daughter" here, instead of in the preceding clause. For the sake of clearness, the translator has taken the liberty of transposing it.

¹³⁴³ The Chinese characters are i, i.e., "surname and personal (what we should call 'Christian') name." But Motowori's simple reading 姓名 "name," approves itself as probably near to the author's intention.

¹³⁴⁴ Motowori indulges in several conjectures as to the meaning of this detail, which, it will be seen, is not referred to in the sequel, and is therefore pointless.

¹³⁴⁵ The same Japanese word kagi, which is used as the equivalent of the Chinese character 鈎, "hook," came in latter times to denote a key.

¹³⁴⁶ "Three threads" are in Japanese mi wa, whence the etymology of the name of Miwa given below in the text. The real derivation is altogether doubtful. The shrine of Miwa was in very early times regarded with such extraordinary reverence, that the term Oho-gami, "Great Deity," unless otherwise qualified, was commonly understood to refer to the god of Miwa.

¹³⁴⁷ Miwa no kimi, written simply 神君 (literally, "Divine Dukes,") another sign of the estimation in which the shrine of Miwa was held.

¹³⁴⁸ Kama no kimi.

SECTION LXVI.—EMPEROR SŪ-JIN (PART IV.—WAR WITH KING TAKE-HANI-YASU)

Again in this august reign His Augustness Oho-biko ¹³⁴⁹ was sent to the circuit of Koshi, ¹³⁵⁰ and his son, His Augustness Take-nuna-kaha-wake, ¹³⁵¹ was sent to the twelve circuits to the eastward to quiet the unsubmissive people. Again Hiko-imasu was sent to the land of Taniha ¹³⁵² to slay Kugamimi-no-mikasa ¹³⁵³ (this is the name of a person). So when His Augustness Oho-biko was going away to the land of Koshi, a young girl wearing a loin-skirt ¹³⁵⁴ stood on the Pass of Hera ¹³⁵⁵ in Yamashiro, and sang, saying:

"Now then! Oh Prince Mima-ki-iri! Oh Prince Mi-ma-ki-iri! Ignorant that they, to steal and slay one's life, cross backwards and forwards by the back-door, cross backwards and forwards by the front door and spy,—Oh, Prince Mima-ki-iri!" ¹³⁵⁶

Hereupon His Augustness Oho-biko, thinking it strange, turned his horse back, and asked the young girl, saying: "These words that thou speakest, what are they?" The young girl replied, saying: "I said nothing; I was only singing a song,"—and thereupon she suddenly vanished, none could see whither. So his Augustness Oho-biko returned up again [to the capital] and made a report [of the matter] to the Heavenly Sovereign, ¹³⁴⁹ See Sect. LXI, Note 5.

¹³⁵⁰ Literally, "to the Lord of Koshi," i.e., "to the land of Koshi;" which provinces are intended by the "twelve circuits to the eastward" mentioned immediately below is uncertain; but Motowori hazards the guess that we should understand Ise (including Iga and Shima), Wohari, Mikaha, Tohotafumi (pron. Tōtōmi), Suruga, Kahi, Idzu, Sagami Musashi, Fusa (the modern Kadzusa, Shimofusa, and Aha), Hitachi, and Michinoku (a vague name for the north-eastern portions of the Main Island of the whole east and north-east of the country. He likewise supposes the use of the word "road" for circuit or province to have had its origin in the "road" along which the Imperial officers despatched to the outlying provinces had to travel to reach their post, and remarks very pertinently in another passage of his commentary that the term "road" denotes a province more especially from the point of view of its subjugation or government. His explanation is, however, rendered untenable by the fact that the division of the country into such "roads" or "circuits" was an idea evidently borrowed from the neighbouring peninsula of Korea. At first, as in this passage, somewhat vaguely used in the sense of province," it settled down into the designation of "a set of adjacent provinces." Thus the Tō-kai-dō, or "Eastern Maritime Circuit," includes fifteen provinces, the Hoku-roku-dō or "Northern Land Circuit," includes seven provinces, and so on. Cont. Sect. LXII, Note 20.

¹³⁵¹ i.e., "brave-lagoon-river-youth."

¹³⁵² See Sect. LXII, Note 4.

¹³⁵⁴ The nature of this garment is not known. One would suppose, from the way it is mentioned in the text, that there was perhaps some-thing contrary to custom in its use by a young girl. The parallel passage in the "Chronicles" does not mention it.

¹³⁵⁵ Or, "Hill of Hera," —Hera-zaka. The "Chronicles" write this name with the characters 平坂 Hira-zaka, i.e., "Even Pass" or "Hill."

¹³⁵⁶ The meaning of this poem, which must be considered as one pro-longed exclamation, is: "Oh my sovereign! Oh my sovereign! Heedless or ignorant of "the plots hatched against thy life near the very precincts of thy palace, thou "sendest away thy soldiers to fight in distant parts. Oh my sovereign!"—It will be remembered that Prince Mima-ki-ri was the (abbreviated) native name of the reigning monarch, commonly known to posterity by his "canonical name" of Sūjin. The word rendered "life" is literally "thread" and the Impersonal Pronoun "one's" used in the translation, must be understood to refer to the Emperor.

who replied and charged him [saying]: "Methinks this is a sign that my half-brother, King Take-hani-yasu, ¹³⁵⁷ who dwells in the land of Yamashiro, is planning some foul plot. ¹³⁵⁸ [Do thou,] uncle, raise an army, and go [after him]." When he forthwith sent him off, joining to him his Augustness Hiko-kuni-buku, ¹³⁵⁹ ancestor of the Grandees of Wani, ¹³⁶⁰ they set sacred jars on the Pass of Wani, ¹³⁶¹ and went away. Thereupon, when they reached the River Wakara ¹³⁶² in Yamashiro, King Take-hani-yasu, who had raised an army, was waiting to intercept [their passage], and [the two hosts] stood confronting and challenging each other with the river between them. ¹³⁶³ So the place was called by the name of Idomi, ¹³⁶⁴—what is now called Idzumi. Then His Augustness Hiko-kuni-buku spoke, begging the other side ¹³⁶⁵ to let fly the first arrow. ¹³⁶⁶ Then King Take-hani-yasu shot, but could not strike. Thereupon, on his Augustness Kuni-buku shooting an arrow, it forthwith struck King Take-hani-yasu dead. So the whole army was routed, and fled in confusion. Then the [Imperial troops pursued] after the fugitive army as far as the ferry of Kusuba, when harassed by the pursuit, exterunt [hostium] excrementa, quae braci adhaeserunt. Quare isti loco impositum est nomen Kusobakama. In praesenti nominatur Kusu-ba. ¹³⁶⁷ Again, on being intercepted in their flight and cut down, [their bodies] floated like cormorants in the river. So the river was called by the name of U-kaha. ¹³⁶⁸ Again, because the warriors were cut to pieces, the place was called by the name of Hafuri-sono. ¹³⁶⁹ Having thus finished [the work of] pacification, they went up [to the capital] to make their report [to the Heavenly Sovereign].

¹³⁵⁷ See Sect. LXI, Notes 12 and 10.

¹³⁵⁸ Literally, "foul heart."

¹³⁵⁹ i.e., probably. "prince land-pacifier." The first element of the compound is sometimes omitted.

¹³⁶⁰ Wani no omi. Wani ("crocodile") 13 the name of a place in the province of Yamato.

¹³⁶¹ Wani-zaka. For the setting of jars conf. Sect LX, Note 20.

¹³⁶² Wakara gaha. It is what is now called the Idzumi-gaha. Of Wakara we have nothing but an altogether untenable etymology given in the parallel passage of the "Chronicles."

¹³⁶³ More literally, "each having put the river in the middle, and mutually challenging."

¹³⁶⁴ i.e., "challenging." The more likely etymology of Idzumi, which is written with the character 泉, is "source" or "spring."

¹³⁶⁵ The original has the very curious expressions 廂人, literally, "people of the side-building," which was a great crux to the early editors, Motowori is probably right in interpreting it in the sense of "the other side," i.e., "the enemy."

¹³⁶⁶ 忌矢, literally "the arrow to be shunned, or avoided,"—but rather, in accordance with Archaic Japanese parlance, "the sacred arrow." Motowori says: "At the commencement of a battle it was the custom for each side to let fly an "initial arrow." Being the commencement of the affair, the arrow was considered "specially important and was shot off reverently with prayers to the Gods,—" whence its name."

¹³⁶⁷ i.e., "excrements [fœdata] braci." But it is not at all probable that this is the correct etymology of the name. The stream is a small one in the eastern part of the province of Kahachi.

¹³⁶⁸ i.e., "cormorant-river."

¹³⁶⁹ i.e., "the garden of cutting-to-pieces."

SECTION LXVII.—EMPEROR SŪ-JIN (PART V.—PEACE RESTORED AND TRIBUTE LEVIED)

So His Augustness Oho-biko went away to Koshi in accordance with the previous [Imperial] commands. Then Take-nuna-kaha-wake, who had been sent round by the east, and his father Oho-biko met together in Ahidzu. So the place was called by the name of Ahidzu. ¹³⁷⁰ Wherefore, each of them, having settled the government of the land to which he had been sent, made his report [to the Heavenly Sovereign]. Then the Empire was at peace and the people prosperous. Thereupon tribute on the arrow-notches of the men and tribute on the finger-tips of the women was first levied. ¹³⁷¹ So in praise of this august reign they said: "The Heavenly Sovereign Mimaki, who ruled the first land." ¹³⁷² Again, in this reign the Pool of Yosami ¹³⁷³ was made; moreover the Pool of Sakawori at Karu ¹³⁷⁴ was made.

¹³⁷⁰ A district forming the southern part of the modern province of Ihashiro in north-eastern Japan. The derivation here given, from ahi-dzu "meeting port," seems fanciful.

¹³⁷¹ I.e., taxes levied on the produce of the chase, by which the men gained their livelihood, and on the domestic handwork of the women.

¹³⁷² Motowori has a not particularly satisfactory note, in which he endeavours to explain this obscure phrase. The word "first" should evidently qualify the Verb "ruled," and not the Substantive "land," and the applicability of the saying to a sovereign, of whom it is not recorded that he initiated anything save the taxes, is not apparent. The author of the "Chronicles" observes the verisimilitudes better by applying a synonymous designation to the first "Earthly Emperor" Jim-mu.

¹³⁷³ See Sect. LXII, Note 85.

¹³⁷⁴ Reference to the parallel passage of the "Chronicles" shows that probably a couple of words are here omitted from the text, which should read "the Pool of Karu and the Pool of Sakawori" (Karu no ike, Sakawori no ike). Karu is the celebrated ancient capital mentioned in Sect. LVII, Note 1, Sakawori is quite unknown except from this notice of it, and the derivation of the name is uncertain.

SECTION LXVIII.—EMPEROR SŪ-JIN (PART VI.—HIS AGE AND PLACE OF BURIAL)

The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were one hundred and sixty-eight. His august mausoleum is on the mound at the corner of the Yamanobe road. ¹³⁷⁵ ¹³⁷⁵ This place, where the Emperor Kei-ko is likewise said to have been interred, was in the province of Yamato, and the road mentioned is supposed by Motowori to have been the highway from Hatsuse into the province of Yamashiro. The word Yamanobe signifies "in the neighbourhood of the mountain" (yama no he).

SECTION LXIX.—EMPEROR SUI-NIN (PART I.— GENEALOGIES)

His Augustness Ikume-iri-biko-isachi dwelt at the palace of Tama-kaki in Shiki,¹³⁷⁶ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded Her Augustness the Princess Sahaji,¹³⁷⁷ younger sister of His Augustness Saho-biko, and begot an august child: His Augustness Homo-tsu-wake¹³⁷⁸ (one Deity). Again, wedding Her Augustness the Princess Hibasu, daughter of King Tatsu-michi-no-ushi, Prince of Taniha, he begot august children: His Augustness Ini-shiki-no-iri-biko;¹³⁷⁹ next His Augustness Oho-tarashi-hiko-oshiro-wake;¹³⁸⁰ next His Augustness Oho-naka-tsu-hiko;¹³⁸¹ next His Augustness Yamato-hime;¹³⁸² next His Augustness Waka-ki-iri-biko¹³⁸³ (five Deities). Again, wedding Her Augustness Nubata-no-iri-bika,¹³⁸⁴ younger sister of Her Augustness Princess Hibasu, he begot august children: His Augustness Nu-tarashi-wake;¹³⁸⁵ next His Augustness Iga-tarashi-hiko¹³⁸⁶ (two Deities). Again, wedding Her Augustness Azami-no-iri-bime,¹³⁸⁷ younger sister of His Augustness Nubata-no-iri-bime,¹³⁸⁸ he begot august children: His Augustness Ikobaya-wake;¹³⁸⁹ next Her Augustness the Princess of Azami¹³⁹⁰ (two Deities). Again, wedding Her Augustness Kagu-ya-hime,¹³⁹¹ daughter of King Oho-tsutsuki-tari-ne, he begot an august child: King Wozabe¹³⁹² (one Deity). Again, wedding Karibata-tobe daughter of Fuchi Ohokuni in Yamashiro,¹³⁹³ he begot august children: King Ochi-wake;¹³⁹⁴ next King Ika-tarashi-hiko;¹³⁹⁵ next King Itoshi-wake.¹³⁹⁶ Again, wedding Oto-karibata-tobe,¹³⁹⁷ daughter of ¹³⁷⁶ For Shiki see Sect. LXIII, Note 1. Tama-kaki signifies "jewel (i.e., beautiful) hedge."

¹³⁷⁷ This name and the next have already been met with in Sect. LXI, as have those of Princess Hibasu, King Tatasu-mechi, King Oho-tsutsuki-ne, Princess Kari-bata-tobe, and King Inase-biko.

¹³⁷⁸ See Sect. LXXI, Note 8.

¹³⁷⁹ The signification of this name is not clear, but Motowori identifies Shiki with the place of the same name.

¹³⁸⁰ This name seems to be a string of Honorifics signifying "great perfect prince ruling lord."

¹³⁸¹ i.e., "great middle prince," he being third of five children.

¹³⁸² i.e., "Yamato princess." She is a very celebrated personage in Japanese legendary story,—high priestess of Ise and aunt of the hero Yamato-take. A miraculous tale is related of her birth, and she is supposed to have lived several hundreds of years.

¹³⁸³ The signification of this name is obscure.

¹³⁸⁴ The signification of this name is obscure.

¹³⁸⁵ Motowori's conjectural interpretation of this name is "jewel-perfect-lord."

¹³⁸⁶ The signification of iga is obscure. The other two elements of the compound signify "perfect prince."

¹³⁸⁷ Signification obscure.

¹³⁸⁸ Signification obscure.

¹³⁸⁹ Signification obscure. The "Chronicles" read this name Ike-baya.

¹³⁹⁰ Azami-tsu-hime, Signification obscure.

¹³⁹¹ i.e., probably "the refulgent princess," the syllable ya being void of signification as in Ka-no-Nana-saku-ya-hime (see Sect. XXXVII, Note 3). This name is celebrated as that of the heroine of the fairy-tale entitled "Tale of a Bamboo-Cutter." though there is no reason for identifying the two personages.

¹³⁹² This name is obscure, and Motowori suspects it of being corrupt.

¹³⁹³ Yamashiro no ohokunino fuchi. Yamashiro is the name of a province, and Ohokuni ("great land" that of a village, while Fuchi is a personal name written with a character signifying "deep pool."

¹³⁹⁴ Ochiwake no miko. Motowori derives ochi from oho, "great, and chi, supposed to be an Honorific, while wake is taken to mean "lord." After all, the signification of the name remains obscure.

¹³⁹⁵ Ika-tarashi-hiko no miko. The name probably signifies "severe (or dignified) perfect prince."

¹³⁹⁶ This name is obscure.

¹³⁹⁷ i.e., Karibata-tobe, the younger sister.

Fuchi of Otokuni, he begot august children: King Iha-tsuku-wake; ¹³⁹⁸ next Her Augustness Iha-tsuku-bime, another name for whom was Her Augustness Futaji-no-iri-bime ¹³⁹⁹ (two Deities). The august children of this Heavenly Sovereign [numbered] altogether sixteen (thirteen Kings and three Queens). So His Augustness Oho-tarashi-hiko-oshiro-wake [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. (His august stature was ten feet ¹⁴⁰⁰ two inches: the length of his august shank was four feet one inch), The next, His Augustness Inishi-no-iri-biko made the pool of Chinu; ¹⁴⁰¹ again he made the pool of Sayama, ¹⁴⁰² again he made the pool of Takatsu at Kusaka ¹⁴⁰³ Again he dwelt at the palace of Kahakami at Totori, ¹⁴⁰⁴ and caused a thousand cross-swords ¹⁴⁰⁵ to be made, and presented them to the temple of the Deity of Iso-no-kami. ¹⁴⁰⁶ Forthwith he dwelt at that palace, ¹⁴⁰⁷ and established the Kahakami Tribe, ¹⁴⁰⁸ The next, His Augustness Oho-naka-tsu-hiko, (was the ancestor of the Lords of Yamanobe, ¹⁴⁰⁹ of the Saki. kusa, ¹⁴¹⁰ of the Lords of Inaki, ¹⁴¹¹ Lords of the Ada, ¹⁴¹² of the Lords of Minui in the Land of Wohari: ¹⁴¹³ of the Lords of Ihanashi in Kibi, ¹⁴¹⁴ of the Lords of Koromo, ¹⁴¹⁵ of the Lords of Takasuka, ¹⁴¹⁶ of the Dukes of Asuka, ¹⁴¹⁷ and of the Lords of Mure). ¹⁴¹⁸ The next, Her Augustness Yamato-hime, (was the high-priestess of ¹⁴¹⁹ the temple of the Great Deity of Ise). The next, King Ikobaya-wake (was the ancestor of the Lords ¹³⁹⁸ This name and the next are obscure. The first of the two is not in the older editions, but Motowori supplies what appears to be a lacuna in the text by adding the five characters 石衡別王次.

¹³⁹⁹ Signification obscure.

¹⁴⁰⁰ The actual word "feet" is not in the original, but an equivalent Chinese measure is used.

¹⁴⁰¹ Chinu no ike. The "Sea of Chinu" in the province of Idzumi, which is the same as the "Pool" here mentioned, has been mentioned in Sect. XLIV, Note 36.

¹⁴⁰² Sayama no ike, in the province of Kahachi. The name probably signifies a "gorge" or "defile."

¹⁴⁰³ See above Sect. XLIV, Note 31.

¹⁴⁰⁴ Totori (lit. "bird-catching") was in the province of Idzumi, and the name is said to have been derived from the place having been one of those through which Ohotaka of Yamanobe passed when pursuing the bird whose sight was to make Prince Homachi-wake obtain the power of speech. (See the story as given at the beginning of the next Section). The name of Kaha-kami ("head-waters of the river"), as we learn by comparison with the parallel passage of the "Chronicles," is to be traced to the River Udo, near whose head waters the palace in question is said to have been situated.

¹⁴⁰⁵ See Sect. XLV, Note 5.

¹⁴⁰⁶ See Sect. XLV, Note 16.

¹⁴⁰⁷ Or, "in that temple."

¹⁴⁰⁸ Kahakami-be.

¹⁴⁰⁹ Yamanobe no wake. Yamanobe (or Yamabe) is the name of a district in Yamato and signifies "mountain-slope."

¹⁴¹⁰ Sakikusa no wake. Of Sakikusa nothing is known. The word means "lily."

¹⁴¹¹ Inaki no wake. Which Inaki is meant is not known, there being several places of that name in Japan. The name is connected with the word ine, "rice."

¹⁴¹² Ada no wake. Of Ada nothing is known.

¹⁴¹³ Wohari no kuni no Minu no wake. Minu is the name of a village, and signifies "three moors."

¹⁴¹⁴ Kibi no Ihanashi no wake. Ihanashi is the name of a district, forming part of the modern province of Bizen, and seems to signify "rockless."

¹⁴¹⁵ Koromo no wake. Motowori supposes this name to be corrupt. Koromo is the name of a village in Mikaha.

¹⁴¹⁶ Takasuka no wake. Nothing is known either of the place or of the family.

¹⁴¹⁷ Asuka no kimi. It is not known where was this Asuka, which must not be confounded with the famous Asuka mentioned in Sect. CXXXIII, Note 11.

¹⁴¹⁸ Mure no wake. There are several places called Mure. The signification of the name is obscure.

¹⁴¹⁹ Or more literally, "worshipped and celebrated the festivals at," etc.

Anahobe at Saho). ¹⁴²⁰ The next, Her Augustness the Princess of Azami (was married to King Inase-biko). The next, King Ochi-wake (was the ancestor of the Mountain Dukes of Wotsuki ¹⁴²¹ and of the Duke of Koromo in Mikaha). ¹⁴²² The next, King Ika-tarashi-hiko (was the ancestor of the Mountain Dukes Kasuga, ¹⁴²³ of the Dukes of Ike in Koshi, ¹⁴²⁴ and of the Dukes of Kasugahe). ¹⁴²⁵ The next, King Itoshi-wake (owing to his having no children, made the Itoshi Tribe ¹⁴²⁶ his proxy). The next, King Iha-tsuku-wake, (was the ancestor of the Dukes of Haguchi ¹⁴²⁷ and of the Dukes of Miwo). ¹⁴²⁸ The next, Her Augustness Futaji-no-Iri-hime (became the empress of His Augustness Yamato-take).

¹⁴²⁰ Saho no Anahobe-wake. The name Anahobe is derived from Anahobe, the name of the Emperor Yu-riyaku, and be "a tribe," it being related in the "Chronicles" that the tribe which was established as his "name-proxy" was so called.

¹⁴²¹ Wotsuki no yama no kimi. Wotsuki is the name of a place in Afumi (Omi). The family name must be interpreted to signify that they were wardens of the mountain.

¹⁴²² Mikaha no Koromo no kimi. Conf. the name in Note 40, with which this is probably identical. Motowori suspects an error in the text.

¹⁴²³ Kazuga no yama no kimi. Conf. the name in Note 46.

¹⁴²⁴ Koshi no ike no kimi. Nothing is known of the place or of the family; Koshi may or may not be the northern province of that name.

¹⁴²⁵ Kasugabe no kimi. There were two places of the name of Kasugabe (i.e. "Kasuga Clan," so called perhaps after a family that had resided there). It is not known which is here alluded to.

¹⁴²⁶ Itoshi-be. The name, which is thus restored by Motowori, is variously mutilated in the older editions. This is the first mention of adoption, lit. in Japanese "child-proxy making." The custom is perpetually referred to in the later portion of these "Records."

¹⁴²⁷ Haguhi no kimi. Haguhi is the name of a district in Noto. The derivation is obscure.

¹⁴²⁸ Miwo no kimi. Miwo is the name of a place in Afumi. It probably means "three mountain-folds."

SECTION LXX. EMPEROR SUI-NIN (PART II. CONSPIRACY OF KING SAHO-BIKO AND THE EMPRESS SAHO-BIME)

When this Heavenly Sovereign made Saho-bime his Empress, Her Augustness Saho-bime's elder brother, King Saho-biko, asked his younger sister, saying: "Which is dearer [to thee], thine elder brother or thy husband?" She replied, saying "Mine elder brother is dearer." Then King Saho-biko conspired, saying: "If I be truly the dearer to thee, let me and thee rule the empire," and forthwith he made an eight times tempered stiletto, ¹⁴²⁹ and handed it to his younger sister, saying: "Slay the Heavenly Sovereign in his sleep with this small knife."

So the Heavenly Sovereign, not knowing of this conspiracy, was augustly sleeping, with the Empress' august knees as his pillow. Then the Empress tried to cut his august throat with the stiletto; but though she lifted it thrice, she could not cut the throat for an irrepressible feeling of sadness, and she wept tears, which fell overflowing ¹⁴³⁰ onto [the Heavenly Sovereign's] august face. Straightway the Heavenly Sovereign started up, and asked the Empress, saying: "I have had a strange dream: A violent shower came from the direction of Saho and suddenly wetted my face; again a small damask-coloured snake coiled itself round my neck. Of what may such a dream be the omen?" Then the Empress, thinking it improper to dispute, ¹⁴³¹ forthwith informed the Heavenly Sovereign, saying: "Mine elder brother King Saho-biko asked me, ¹⁴³² saying: 'Which is dearer [to thee], thy husband or thine elder brother?' So, as I was embarrassed by [this] direct question, I replied, saying: 'Oh! mine elder brother is the dearer.'

Then he charged ¹⁴³³ me, saying: 'I and thou will together rule the Empire; so the Heavenly Sovereign must be slain;'—and so saying, he made an eight times tempered stiletto, and handed it to me. Therefore I wanted to cut thine august throat; but though I thrice lifted [the weapon], a feeling of regret suddenly arose, so that I could not cut thy throat, and the tears that I wept fell and wetted thine august face. [The dream] was surely the omen of this." Then the Heavenly Sovereign said: "How nearly have I been destroyed! "and forthwith he raised an army to smite King Saho-biko, whereupon the King made a rice-castle ¹⁴³⁴ to await the fray. At this time Her Augustness Saho-bime, ¹⁴²⁹ For stiletto see above, Sect. XXXVI, Note 8. The curious word ya-shio-wori (八摺折) in the text seems to have the sense of "eight times tempered," i.e., tempered over and over again, which Motowori assigns to it. The same expression is used in Sect. XVIII (Note 16) to denote the refining of rice-liquor.

¹⁴³⁰ This word "overflowing" is more appropriately placed in the version of the story given in the "Chronicles," where the author makes her tears first fill her sleeve (a common Japanese figure of speech), and thence "overflow "on to the sleeping Monarch's face.

¹⁴³¹ i.e., seeing that it would be vain in deny the truth.

¹⁴³² The First Personal Pronoun is written with the self-depreciatory character 妾, "concubine."

¹⁴³³ Or "enticed."

¹⁴³⁴ This expression, which is repeated elsewhere, is one which has given rise to a considerable amount of discussion. The "Chronicles" tell us expressly that "rice [stalks] were piled up to make a castle,"—an assertion which, as Motowori remarks, is simply incredible. He therefore adopts Mabuchi's suggestion that a castle like a rice-castle is what is intended,—"rice-castle" being taken "to mean rice-store" or "granary," such granaries having probably been stoutly built in order to protect them from thieves. The historian of the Tang dynasty quoted in the "Exposition of the Foreign Notices of Japan" says that the Japanese had no castles, but only unable to forget her elder brother, fled out through the back-gate [of the palace], and came into the rice-castle.

palisades of timber. The latter might well however have been called castles by the Japanese, though they would not have been accounted such by the Chinese, who already built theirs of stone.

SECTION LXXI.—EMPEROR SUI-NIN (PART III.—BIRTH OF PRINCE HOMU-CHI-WAKE AND DEATH OF THE CONSPIRATORS)

At this time the Empress ¹⁴³⁵ was pregnant. Thereupon the Heavenly Sovereign could not restrain [his pity for] the Empress, who was pregnant and whom he had loved for now three years. So he turned his army aside, and did not hasten the attack. During this delay, the august child that she had conceived was born. So having put out the august child and set it outside the rice-castle, she caused [these words] to be said to the Heavenly Sovereign: "If this august child be considered to be the Heavenly Sovereign's august child, let him ¹⁴³⁶ deign to undertake it." Hereupon the Heavenly Sovereign said: ¹⁴³⁷ "Although detesting the elder brother, I yet cannot repress my love for the Empress," and forthwith planned to secure the Empress. Wherefore, choosing from among his warriors a band of the strongest and deftest, he charged [them, saying]: "When ye take the august child, likewise abduct the queen its mother. Whether by the hair or by the hands, or wherever ye may best lay hold of her, clutch her and drag her out." Then the Empress, knowing his intention beforehand, shaved off all her hair and covered her head with her hair, and likewise made her jewel-string rotten and wound it thrice round her arm, and moreover made her august garments rotten by means of rice-liquor and put on the garments as if they were whole. Having made these preparations, she took the august child in her arms and pushed it outside the castle. Then the strong men, taking the august child, forthwith clutched at the august parent. Then, on their clutching her august hair, the august hair fell off of itself; on their clutching her august arms, the jewel-string likewise snapped; on their clutching her august garments, the august garments at once tore. Therefore they obtained the august child, but did not get the august parent. So the warriors came back [to the Sovereign], and reported, saying: "On account of her august hair falling off of itself, of her august garments easily tearing, and moreover of the jewel-string which was wound round her august hand at once snapping, we have not got the august parent; but we have obtained the august child." Then the Heavenly Sovereign, sorry and angry, hated the people who made the jewels, and deprived them all of their lands. ¹⁴³⁸ So the proverb says: "Landless jewel-makers." ¹⁴³⁹ Again did the Heavenly Sovereign cause ¹⁴⁴⁰ the Empress to be told, saying: "A child's name must be given by the mother; by what august name shall this child be called?" Then she replied, saying: "As he was born now at the time of the castle ¹⁴³⁵ I.e., Her Augustness Saho-bime, who was the subject of the preceding sentence.

¹⁴³⁶ I.e., the Sovereign. The import of this passage is, according to Motowori, that the Empress imagined that her own conduct might perhaps influence the Emperor to refuse to give the child she bore him its proper rank,—not from doubts as to its legitimacy, but as having a rebel mother. By "undertaking" the child is of course meant undertaking the care and education of it.

¹⁴³⁷ Motowori supposes the Chinese character rendered "said" to be an error, and prefers to consider this clause as containing not the words, but the thought of the Monarch. It would certainly be more convenient to adopt this view, if it were sanctioned by any text.

¹⁴³⁸ Or, as Motowori prefers to read, "deprived them of all their lands."

¹⁴³⁹ There is nowhere else any reference to this saying. Motowori supposes it to point to those who, hoping for reward, get punishment instead, these jewellers having doubtless rotted the, string on which the beads were strung by special desire of the Empress, whereas they ended by getting nothing but confiscation for their pains.

¹⁴⁴⁰ Motowori (following Mabuchi) is evidently correct in supposing the character 命 in this place, and again a little further on, to be a copyist's error for 令, "caused," and the translator has rendered it accordingly, being burnt with fire and in the midst of the fire, it were proper to call him by the august name of Prince ¹⁴⁴¹ Homu-chi-wake." ¹⁴⁴² And again he caused her to be asked: "How shall he be reared?" ¹⁴⁴³ She replied, saying: "He must be reared by taking an august mother ¹⁴⁴⁴ and fixing on old bathing-women and young bathing-women." ¹⁴⁴⁵ So he was respectfully reared in accordance with the Empress's instructions. Again he asked the Empress, saying: "Who shall loosen the fresh small pendant ¹⁴⁴⁶ which thou elitist make fast?" She replied, saying: "It were proper that Ye-hime and Oto-hime, ¹⁴⁴⁷ daughters of King Tatasu-michi-no-ushi ¹⁴⁴⁸ prince of Taniha, should serve thee, for ¹⁴⁴¹ "Prince "is here written 御子.

¹⁴⁴² This name may also be read Ho-muchi-wake, and is in the "Chronicles" given as Ho-muchi-wake while it appears as Homuchi-wake at the commencement of Sect. LXIX. The first two elements apparently signify "fire-possessing;" while wake is the frequently recurring Honorific signifying either "lord "or "young and flourishing."

¹⁴⁴³ Lit., "his days be reverently prolonged." The same expression is repeated thrice below.

¹⁴⁴⁵ The characters 大湯坐若湯坐 used in the original of this passage would, if they stood alone, be of difficult interpretation. But a comparison with the passage in "One account" of "Chronicles," which relates the nursing of Fuki-ahezu-no-mikoto, the father of the first "Earthly Emperor "Jim-mu, leaves no doubt that the author intended to speak of bathing-women attached to the service of the Imperial infant.

¹⁴⁴⁶ The words midzu no wo-himo, literally rendered "fresh small pendant," call for some explanation. Midzu, which includes in a single p. 236 term the ideas of youth, freshness, and beauty, is here used as an Honorific. The "small pendant "is interpreted by Mabuchi and Motowori to signify the "inner, girdle" which held together the under-garment of either sex. The old literature of Japan teems with allusions to the custom of lovers or spouses making fast each other's inner girdle, which might not be untied till they met again, and the poets perpetually make a lover ask some such question as "When I am far from thee, who shall loosen my girdle?" The translator cannot refrain from here quoting, for the benefit of the lover of Japanese verse (though he will not attempt to translate them), the two most graceful of the many stanzas from the "Collection of a Myriad Leaves" brought together by Motowori to illustrate this passage:

Wagimoko ga

Yuhiteshi himo wo

Tokame ye mo:

Toyeba tayu to mo

Tada ni afu made ni,

Unabara wo

Tohoku watarite

Toshi-fu to-mo

Ko-ra ga musuberu

Himo toku na yume.

Tanigaha Shisei also appropriately quotes the following:

Futari shite

Musubiski himo wo

Hitori shite

Ware ha toki-mizhi

Tada ni afu made ha.

a literal rendering of which would run thus: "I will not, till we meet face to face, loosen alone the girdle which we two tied together."

¹⁴⁴⁷ i.e., the "Elder Princess and the Younger Princess."

¹⁴⁴⁸ Motowori is probably right in explaining tatasu as the Honorific Causative of tatsu, "to stand" and michi no ushi as michi-nushi or kuni-nushi, i.e., "owner of the province," "ruler."

these two queens are of unsullied parentage." ¹⁴⁴⁹ So at last [the Heavenly Sovereign] slew King Saho-biko, and his younger sister followed him. ¹⁴⁵⁰

¹⁴⁴⁹ Lit., "are pure subjects."
¹⁴⁵⁰ I.e., was slain with him.

SECTION LXXII.—EMPEROR SUI-NIN (PART IV.—THE DUMB PRINCE HOMU-CHI-WAKE)

So the way they led about and amused the august child was by making a two-forked boat ¹⁴⁵¹ out of a two-forked cryptomeria from Ahidzu in Wohari, ¹⁴⁵² bringing it up and floating it on the Pool of Ichishi and on the Pool of Karu ¹⁴⁵³ in Yamato, [thus] leading about and amusing the august child. Nevertheless the august child spoke never a word, though his eight-grasp beard reached to the pit of his stomach. ¹⁴⁵⁴ So ¹⁴⁵⁵ it was on hearing the cry of a high-flying swan ¹⁴⁵⁶ that he made his first utterance. ¹⁴⁵⁷ Then [the Heavenly Sovereign] sent Yamanobe-no-Ohotaka ¹⁴⁵⁸ (this is a name of a person) to catch the bird. So this person, pursuing the swan, arrived in the Land of Harima from the Land of Ki, and again in his pursuit crossed over to the Land of Inaba, then reaching the Land of Taniba and the Land of Tajima; [thence] pursuing round to the eastward, he reached the Land of Afumi. and thereupon crossed over into the Land of Minu; and, passing along by the Land of Wohari, pursued it into the Land of Shinanu, and at length, reaching in his pursuit the Land of Koshi, spread a net in the Estuary of Wanami, ¹⁴⁵⁹ and, having caught the bird, brought it up [to the capital] and presented it [to the Sovereign]. So that estuary is called the Estuary of Wanami. It had been thought that, on seeing the bird again, he would speak; but he did not speak, as had been thought. ¹⁴⁶⁰ Hereupon the Heavenly Sovereign, deigning to be grieved, augustly fell asleep, when, in an august dream, he was instructed, saying: "If thou wilt build my temple like unto thine august abode, the august child shall surely speak." When he had been thus instructed, [the Heavenly Sovereign] made grand divination to seek what Deity's desire ¹⁴⁶¹ this might be. Then [it was discovered that] the curse was the august ¹⁴⁵¹ From a comparison with a passage in the "Chronicles," where the same expression occurs, one is led to suppose that the craft here mentioned was a sort of double boat, in each half of which passengers could sit.

¹⁴⁵² Nothing is known of any place called Ahidzu in the province of Wohari.

¹⁴⁵³ Karu has been mentioned in Sect. LVII, Note 1. The Pool of Ihare.

¹⁴⁵⁴ Lit., "in front of his heart." This phrase descriptive of a long beard has already occurred at the commencement of Sect. XII.

¹⁴⁵⁵ Motowori reasonably supposes the character 今 in this sentence to be a copyist's error for the emphatic 爾, and the translation has been made accordingly.

¹⁴⁵⁶ The original has the character 鵞, which is now applied to a small species of swan (Cygnus minor, Pallas; Cygnus Bewickii, Yarrell). But it is uncertain what bird is intended by the author.

¹⁴⁵⁷ A more or less inarticulate utterance is probably meant; but the expression in the original is obscure.

¹⁴⁵⁸ Motowori supposes the Note in the original to refer only to the word Ohotaka, while he takes Yamamobe to be the name of a place (already mentioned in Sect. LXVIII, Note 1). The surname of Ohotaka, signifying "great hawk," was, according to the same commentator, given to the worthy here mentioned in consequence of the incident related in the text. As the bird was not a hawk, this does not seem very convincing, and Motowori's apparent idea that the man was likened to a hawk because he pursued the other bird as a hawk would do, is extremely far-fetched. It is moreover doubtful whether the name should not be read Oho-washi (this is Mabuchi's reading), "great." The "Chronicles" give an altogether different name, viz., Ame-no-yukata-tana.

¹⁴⁵⁹ No such place is now known. The name may be interpreted to mean "snare-net" in allusion to this story, as stated in the next sentence of the text.

¹⁴⁶⁰ The various texts and printed editions all differ slightly in their reading of this passage, and from some it might be gathered that the prince did indeed speak as it had been thought that he would do, but could not speak freely. The translation follows Motowori's emended text.

¹⁴⁶¹ Literally, "heart."

doing of the Great Deity of Idzumo. ¹⁴⁶² So when about to send the august child to worship [at] that Great Deity's temple, [he made divination to discover ¹⁴⁶³] by whom it were well to have him attended. Then the lot fell on King Ake-tatsu. ¹⁴⁶⁴ So he made King Ake-tatsu swear, ¹⁴⁶⁵ saying: "If there is truly to be an answer ¹⁴⁶⁶ to our adoration of this Great Deity, may the heron dwelling on the tree by the Pool of Sagisu ¹⁴⁶⁷ here fall [through my] oath." When he thus spoke, the heron that had been sworn by fell to the ground dead. Again on his commanding it to come to life] in answer to his] oath, it then came to life again. ¹⁴⁶⁸ Moreover he caused to wither by an oath and again brought to life again by an oath a broad-foliaged bear-oak on Cape Amakashi. ¹⁴⁶⁹ Then [the Heavenly Sovereign] granted to Prince Ake-tatsu the name of Prince Yamato-oyu-shiki-tomi-tomi-toyo-asakura-ake-tatsu. ¹⁴⁷⁰ So when the august child was sent off with the two Princes, Prince Ake-tatsu and Prince Una-kami, ¹⁴⁷¹ as his attendants, it was divined ¹⁴⁷² that [if they went out] by the Nara gate, ¹⁴⁷³ they would meet a lame person and a blind person; ¹⁴⁷⁴ [if they went out] by the Ohosaka ¹⁴⁷⁵ gate, they would likewise ¹⁴⁶² I.e., Oho-kuni-nushi (the Master of the Great Land), the aboriginal monarch of Idzumo, the descendant of the Sun Goddess, whose p. 241 abdication of the sovereignty of Japan in favour of the descendant of the Sun Goddess forms the subject-matter of Sect. XXXII. The word tatari, here written with the Chinese character 祟 and rendered "curse," signifies properly the vengeance of a spirit, i.e., either of a deity or of the ghost of a dead man. The word translated "doing" is literally "heart."

¹⁴⁶³ That some such words must be supplied is evident, and the translator has followed Mabuchi and Motowori in supplying them.

¹⁴⁶⁴ Lit., "King Ake-tatsu at the divination."

¹⁴⁶⁵ Remember that the original word ukehi combines the meanings of our words "wager," "oath," "pledge," "curse," etc.,—being in fact a general name for all words to which any mysterious importance attaches.

¹⁴⁶⁶ Lit., a "sign," a "proof."

¹⁴⁶⁷ Sagisu no ike, a pool in Yamato. Sagi-su, signifies "heron's nest."

¹⁴⁶⁸ The reading of the characters 爾者 (rendered "then") in this passage has been a crux to all the editors. Fortunately they make no difference to the sense.

¹⁴⁶⁹ Amakashi no saki, Perhaps "Amakashi Point" would be a better rendering if, as Motowori supposes, an inland place in the province of Yamato is meant. It might be the point or extremity of a hill or bluff. Ame-kashi signifies literally "sweet oak." The "broad-foliaged bear-oak" mentioned immediately above is supposed by Motowori to be the usual evergreen oak, and not any special kind. The epithet "broad-foliaged" is not, as he remarks, specially appropriate, and he moreover supposes the word kuma, "bear," to be a corruption of kumi or kumori, words which would refer to the thick luxuriance of the foliage. The dictionaries do not help us much to a decision on the point.

¹⁴⁷⁰ The component parts of this tremendous name, which is happily abbreviated to Ake-tatsu in the subsequent portions of the text, are somewhat obscure, especially the word oyu, whose reading rests only on a conjecture of Motowori's, who emends the evidently erroneous character 者 to 老 (oyu,) "old." Toyo, "luxuriant," is an Honorific, ake and tatsu signify respectively "dawn" and "rise," while the rest seem to be names of places of which this Prince may be supposed to have been the possessor.

¹⁴⁷¹ Or, the Prince of Unakami, as Unakami is the name of a place Kadzusa.

¹⁴⁷² I.e., shown by divination.

¹⁴⁷³ Nara in Yamato, which is here mentioned for the first time, was the capital, of Japan from A.D. 710 to 784, and has always been famous in Japanese history and literature. The name is derived by the author of the "Chronicles" from the verb narasu, "to cause to resound," the hosts of the Emperor Su-jin having, it is said, caused the earth to resound with their trampling when they went out to do battle with Haniyasu. A more probable derivation is from nara, the name of a kind of deciduous oak, the Quercus glandulifera. The word rendered "gate" should possibly be taken simply in the sense of "exit" or "approach."

¹⁴⁷⁴ See Sect. LXIV, Note 25.

¹⁴⁷⁵ See Sect. LXIV, Note 25.

meet a lame person and a blind person, and that only the Ki gate,—a side gate,¹⁴⁷⁶—would be the lucky gate; and when they started off, they established the Homuji clan¹⁴⁷⁷ in every place they arrived at. So when they had reached Idzumo and had finished worshipping the Great Deity, and were returning up [to the capital], they made in the middle of the River Hi¹⁴⁷⁸ a black plaited bridge and respectfully offered a temporary palace [for the august child] to dwell in.¹⁴⁷⁹ Then when the ancestor of the rulers of the Land of Idzumo, whose name was Kihisa-tsu-mi,¹⁴⁸⁰ having made an imitation green-leafed mountain,¹⁴⁸¹ placed [it] in the lower reach of the river, and was about to present the great august food the august child¹⁴⁸² spoke, saying: "What here resembles a green-leafed mountain in the lower [reach of the] river; looks like a mountain, but is not a mountain. Is it perchance the great court¹⁴⁸³ of the deacons¹⁴⁸⁴ who holds in reverence the Great Deity Ugly-Male-of-the-Reed-Plains¹⁴⁸⁵ that dwells in the temple of So at Ihakuma in Idzumo?¹⁴⁸⁶ [Thus] he deigned to ask. Then the Kings, who had been sent in august attendance [on him], hearing with joy and seeing with delight,¹⁴⁸⁷ set the august child to dwell in the palace of Nagaho at Ajimasa,¹⁴⁸⁸ and despatched a courier [to inform the Heavenly Sovereign]. Then the august child wedded Princess Hinaga¹⁴⁸⁹ for one night. So, on looking privately at the beautiful maiden, [he found her] to be a serpent, at the sight of which he fled away ¹⁴⁷⁶ Homuji-be. The meaning of the clause is that they granted the surname of Homuji to persons in every important locality through which they passed on their journey.

¹⁴⁷⁷ Homuji-be. The meaning of the clause is that they granted the surname of Homuji to persons in every important locality through which they passed on their journey.

¹⁴⁷⁸ See Sect. XVIII, Note 2.

¹⁴⁷⁹ Motowori supposes Kihisa to be the name of a place, and tsu-mi to stand as usual for tsu mochi, "possessor," according to which view the name would mean "lord" or "possessor of Kihisa."

¹⁴⁸⁰ No book of reference with which the translator is acquainted throws any light on this curious expression, and there is no parallel passage in the "Chronicles" to look for help.

¹⁴⁸² Viz., to the Prince ("the august child"). The preparations which Kihisa-tsu-mi is here said to have made are supposed by Motowori to have been prompted by a desire to add beauty to the feast. But the whole passage is very obscure.

¹⁴⁸³ I.e., the priest attached to the worship of, etc. For "deacon" see Note 33 to Sect. LXII.

¹⁴⁸⁴ I.e., the priest attached to the worship of, etc. For "deacon" see Note 33 to Sect. LXII.

¹⁴⁸⁵ These names cannot now be identified, and are of uncertain etymology. Ikakuma seems, however, to mean "curve in the rock." One would have expected in this place, instead of these unknown names, to find a reference to the main temple of the Deity, which was styled Kidzuki no oho-yashiro, i.e., "the great shrine of Kidzuki."

¹⁴⁸⁶ Some such words as "the changed and more intelligent appearance of the Prince, and his attainment of the power of speech" must be mentally supplied in order to bring out the sense which the author intends to convey.

¹⁴⁸⁷ Some such words as "the changed and more intelligent appearance of the Prince, and his attainment of the power of speech" must be mentally supplied in order to bring out the sense which the author intends to convey.

¹⁴⁸⁸ Hi-naga-hime. The signification of the name is obscure, but it would seem most natural to suppose it connected with the River Hi which figures in the Idzumo cycle of legends. A proposal of Motowori's to read Koye-naga instead of the traditional Hi-naga seems scarcely to be meant in earnest. If accepted, it would give us the meaning of "fat and long princess," with reference to the story of her being a serpent.

¹⁴⁸⁹ It will be remembered that the Province of Idzumo is a maritime one, and that the fugitives might be supposed to reach the sea-shore in their flight. It is true that this is exactly the reverse of the direction which they would be obliged to take in travelling up to the capital, which was in Yamato.

alarmed. Then Princess Hinaga was vexed, and, illuminating the sea-plain, ¹⁴⁹⁰ pursued after them in a ship; and they, more and more alarmed at the sight, pulled the august vessel across the mountain-folds, ¹⁴⁹¹ and went fleeing up [to the capital]. Thereupon they made a report, saying: "We have come up [to the capital] because thy great and august child has become able to speak through worship-ping the Great Deity." So the Heavenly Sovereign, delighted, forthwith sent King Unakami back to build the Deity's temple. Thereupon the Heavenly Sovereign, on account of this august child, established the Totori Clan, the Torikahi Clan, the Homuji Clan, the Ohoyuwe and the Wakayuwe. ¹⁴⁹²

¹⁴⁹⁰ It will be remembered that the Province of Idzumo is a maritime one, and that the fugitives might be supposed to reach the sea-shore in their flight. It is true that this is exactly the reverse of the direction which they would be obliged to take in travelling up to the capital, which was in Yamato.

¹⁴⁹¹ In the original Totori-be, Torikahi-be, Homuji-be, Oho-yuwe and Waka-yuwe. All these "gentile names" have a meaning connecting them either really or apparently with the story above related,—to-tori signifying "bird-catcher" and tohi-kahi "bird-feeder," while the name of the Homuji Clan is of course derived from that of the Prince (Homuchi or Homuji), and Oho-yuwe and Waka-yuwe signify respectively "elder bather" and "younger bather."

SECTION LXXIII. EMPEROR SUI-NIN (PART. V.—HIS LATER WIVES.)

Again, in accordance with the Emperor's words, he summoned Her Augustness Princess Hibasu, next Her Augustness Princess Oto, next Her Augustness Princess Utakori, next Her Augustness Princess Matonu, ¹⁴⁹³ daughters of Prince Michi-no-ushi—four Deities in all. Now he kept the two Deities Her Augustness Princess Hibasu and Her Augustness Princess Oto; but as for the two Deities the younger queens, he sent them back to their native place on account of their extreme hideousness. Thereupon Princess Matonu said with mortification: "When it is known in the neighbouring villages that, among sisters of the same family, we have been sent back on account of our ugliness, it will be extremely mortifying;" and, on reaching Sagaraka ¹⁴⁹⁴ in the Land of Yamashiro, she tried to kill herself ¹⁴⁹⁵ by hanging herself from a branch of a tree. So that place was called by the name of Sagariki. It is now called Sagaraka. Again, on reaching Otokuni, ¹⁴⁹⁶ she at last killed herself by jumping into a deep pool. So that place was called by the name of Ochikuni. It is now called Otokuni.

¹⁴⁹³ Hibasu-hime, Oto-hime, Utakori-hime and Matonu-hime. The first two of these names have already appeared above, where the etymology of Hibasu was said to be doubtful, while Oto signifies "younger sister." Matonu has likewise already appeared, and is of uncertain derivation. Motowori supposes this last name to be in this place but an alias for Utakori, which he explains in the sense of "sad heart" with reference to the story of this princess as here told. In any case there is confusion in the legend, for in the parallel passage of the "Chronicles" five princesses are mentioned, whereas at the end of Sect. LXXI of these "Records" the Empress is made to speak of only two. The father's name has been already there explained.

¹⁴⁹⁴ Literally, "wished to die." Motowori supposes that her design was frustrated by her attendants.

¹⁴⁹⁵ Written with characters signifying "younger country," but here supposed by the author to be derived from ochi-kuni, "falling country," in connection with this legend.

¹⁴⁹⁶ Lit. "died by falling."

SECTION LXXIV.—EMPEROR SUI-NIN (PART VI.—TAJIMA-MORI BRINGS BACK THE ORANGE FROM THE ETERNAL LAND.)

Again the Heavenly Sovereign sent Tajima-mori, ¹⁴⁹⁷ ancestor of the Chiefs of Miyake, ¹⁴⁹⁸ to the Eternal Land ¹⁴⁹⁹ to fetch the fruit of the everlasting ¹⁵⁰⁰ fragrant tree. So Tajima-mori at last reached that country, plucked the fruit of the tree, and brought of clubmoss eight and of spears eight; but meanwhile the Heavenly Sovereign had died. Then Tajima-mori set apart of clubmoss four and of spears four, which he presented to the Great Empress, ¹⁵⁰¹ and set up of clubmoss four and of spears four as an offering at the door of the Heavenly Sovereign's august mausoleum, ¹⁵⁰² and, raising on high the fruit of the tree, wailed and wept, saying: "Bringing the fruit of the ever-lasting fragrant tree from the Eternal Land, I have come to serve thee;" and at last he wailed and wept himself to death. This fruit of the everlasting fragrant tree is what is now called the orange. ¹⁵⁰³

¹⁴⁹⁷ The meaning of this name, which is written phonetically both here and in the "Chronicles," has, given rise to differences of opinion, some deriving it from the name of the province of Tajima (itself of obscure origin) and from the word mori "keeper," while others think it comes from tachibana, the Japanese word for orange, with reference to the story here told. The supporters of the former view, on the other hand, derive the tachibana from Tajima-mori.

¹⁴⁹⁸ Miyake no murazhi. Whether miyake is simply the name of a place or whether it should be taken in the sense of "granary," is uncertain. If the latter view be adopted, it would be natural to suppose that this family had originally furnished the superintendents of the Imperial Granaries. In any case it traced its origin to a Korean source (see the "Catalogue of Family Names," and the genealogies in Sect. CXV).

¹⁴⁹⁹ See Sect. XXV.

¹⁵⁰⁰ Written in the parallel passage of the "Chronicles" with characters signifying literally "timeless." The whole of this circumlocution for the orange has indeed to be interpreted by the help of the "Chronicles," it being here written phonetically and offering some difficulties as it stands.

¹⁵⁰¹ This corrupt and obscure passage seems to be well restored by Motowori, whose explanation of it is likewise as convincing as it is ingenious. The expression "clubmoss-oranges" signifies oranges as they grow on the branch surrounded by leaves, while "spear-oranges" are the same divested of leaves, and hanging to the bare twig. Thus the words clubmoss "and" spear "come to be used as "Auxiliary Numerals" for oranges plucked in these two different manners.

¹⁵⁰² Viz., says Motowori, Princess Hibasu, who however, according to the account in the "Chronicles," was already dead at this time.

¹⁵⁰³ The word tachibana (written 橘) in the text should probably be taken as a specific and not as a general term. In modern usage it designates the Citrus japonica. But it is a matter of dispute whether the application of the term has not altered since ancient times, and whether we should not understand by it one of the other kinds of orange now to be found in Japan,—perhaps the Citrus nobilis.

SECTION LXXV.—EMPEROR SUI-NIN (PART VII.—HIS DEATH AND THAT OF THE EMPRESS HIBASU.)

This Heavenly Sovereign's august years were one hundred and fifty-three. His august mausoleum is in the middle of the moor of Mitachi at Sugahara.¹⁵⁰⁴ Again in the time of the Great Empress Her Augustness Princess Hibasu,¹⁵⁰⁵ the Stone-Coffin-Makers¹⁵⁰⁶ were established, and also the Earthenware-Masters' Clan¹⁵⁰⁷ was established. This Empress was buried in the mausoleum of Terama near Saki.¹⁵⁰⁸

¹⁵⁰⁴ Both the locality and the etymology of Mitachi are obscure. Sugahara ("sedge-moor") is known to be in the province of Yamato.

¹⁵⁰⁵ I.e., at the time of the burial of the great Empress, etc.

¹⁵⁰⁶ The character 祝, ("to pray") in the text is indubitably a copyist's error for " 棺, coffin." These stone coffins are described by Mr. Henry von Siebold in his "Note on Japanese Archaeology" p.5. It must be understood that, from being the name of an office, Stone-Coffin-Maker (Ishi-ki-tsukuri) became a "gentile name."

¹⁵⁰⁷ Hanishi-be. The meaning of this expression becomes clear by reference to the parallel passage of the "Chronicles," which it may be worth while to quote at length from Mr. Satow's translation in pp. 229-330 of Vol. VIII, Pt. III, of these Transactions: "In the autumn of 32nd year, on the tsuchi no to uday of the moon, which rose on the ki no ye inu day, the empress Hi ba su hime no Mikoto (in another source called Hi-ba-su ne no Mikoto) died, and they were several days going to bury her. The Mikado commanded all his high officers, saying: "We knew p. 248 before that the practice of following the dead is not good. In the case of the present burying what shall be done? Thereupon Nomi no Sukune advanced and said: "It is not good to bury living men standing at the sepulchre of a prince, and this cannot be handed down to posterity. I pray leave now to propose a convenient plan. and to lay this before the sovereign." And he sent messengers to summon up a hundred of the clay-workers' tribe of the country of Izumo, and he himself directed the men of the clay-workers' tribe in taking clay and forming shapes of men, horses and various things, and presented them to the Mikado, saying: 'From now and henceforward let it be the law for posterity to exchange things of clay for living men, and set them up at sepulchres.' Thereupon the Mikado rejoiced, and commanded Nomi no Sukune, saying: 'Thy expedient plan has truly pleased Our heart; and the things of clay were for the first time set up at the tomb of Hi-ba-su hime no Mikoto. Wherefore these things were haniwa (a circle of clay). Then he seat down an order, saying: 'From now and henceforward, be sure to sit up these things of clay at sepulchres, and let not men be slain.' Mikado bountifully praised Nomi no Sukune, bestowed on him a kneading-place, and appointed him to the charge of the clay-workers' tribe."

¹⁵⁰⁸ In the province of Yamato. In the old poetry there are many plays on, this word Saki, which is homonymous with the Verb "to blossom." But whether that be its real derivation, it were hard to say. Terama appears to signify "Buddhist temple-space," an etymology which is embarrassing to the Shinto commentators who, accepting every word of our text as authentic history, are hard-driven to explain how Buddhist temples could have existed in Japan before the date assigned for the introduction of Buddhism.

SECTION LXXVI.—EMPRESS KEI-KO (PART I,— GENEALOGIES)

The Heavenly Sovereign Oho-tarashi-hiko-oshiro-wake dwelt in the palace of Hishiro at Makimuku, ¹⁵⁰⁹ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded the Elder Lady of Inabi in Harima, ¹⁵¹⁰ daughter of Waka-take, Prince of Kibi ¹⁵¹¹ ancestor of the Grandees of Kibi, ¹⁵¹² and begot august children: King Kushi-tsunu-wake; ¹⁵¹³ next His Augustness Ohousu; ¹⁵¹⁴ next His Augustness Wo-usu, another name for whom is His Augustness Yamato wo-guna; ¹⁵¹⁵ next His Augustness Yamato-ne-ko; ¹⁵¹⁶ next King Kamu-kushi. ¹⁵¹⁷ Again wedding Her Augustness Princess Yasaka-no-iri, ¹⁵¹⁸ daughter of His Augustness Prince Yasaka-no-iri, he begot august children: His Augustness Prince Waka-rarashi; ¹⁵¹⁹ next His Augustness Prince Iho-ki-no-iri; ¹⁵²⁰ next His Augustness Oshi-no-wake; ¹⁵²¹ next Her Augustness Princess Iho-ki-no-iri. ¹⁵²² Children by another concubine were: King Toyo-to-wake; ¹⁵²³ next the Lady Nunoshiro. ¹⁵²⁴ Children by another concubine were: the Lady Nunaki; ¹⁵²⁵ next Her Augustness Princess Kago-yori; ¹⁵²⁶ next King Prince Waka-ki-no-iri; ¹⁵²⁷ next King the Elder Prince of Kibi-no-ye; ¹⁵²⁸ next Her Augustness Princess Takaki; ¹⁵²⁹ next Her Augustness Princess Oto. ¹⁵³⁰ Again wedding Princess Mi-hakashi of Himuku, ¹⁵³¹ he begot an august child:

¹⁵⁰⁹ In the province of Yamato. The etymology of Makimuku is obscure. Hishiro is tentatively derived by Motowori from hi, the Chamaecyparis obtusa (a kind of conifer), and shiro, "an enclosure."

¹⁵¹⁰ Waka-take Kibi tsu biko, Waka-take signifies "young brave."

¹⁵¹¹ Waka-take Kibi tsu biko, Waka-take signifies "young brave."

¹⁵¹² Kibi no omi.

¹⁵¹³ Kushi signifies "wondrous," and wake either "young," or "lord." The meaning of tsunu is obscure.

¹⁵¹⁴ The names of this prince and the next signify respectively "great-foot-pestle" and "little foot-pestle," the origin of the bestowal of which singular designations is thus related in the parallel passage of the "Chronicles:" "The Imperial child Oho-usu and His Augustness Wo-usu were born together the same day as twins. The Heavenly Sovereign, astonished, informed the foot-pestle. So the two Kings were called Great Foot-pestle and Little Foot-pestle." What the import of this passage may be is, however, a mystery both to Tanigaha Shisei and to Motowori.

¹⁵¹⁵ Motowori supposes wo-guna to have been an archaic word for "boy," "me-guna" signifying "girl." Yamato wo-guna would thus signify the boy of Japan. a not inappropriate designation for this prince, who under his later name of Yamato-take (Japan Brave, i.e. the brave man of Japan) has remained as the chief legendary type of the martial prowess of his native land.

¹⁵¹⁶ i.e. Yamato Prince.

¹⁵¹⁷ Komu-kushi no miko, i.e., "divine wondrous."

¹⁵¹⁸ Yamasaka no iri-bime no mikoto. The signification of this name and of the next (Ya-saka no iri-biko no mikoto) is obscure.

¹⁵¹⁹ Waka-tarashi-hiko no mikoto, i.e., "young and perfect prince."

¹⁵²⁰ I-ho-ki no iri-biko no mikoto. Signification obscure.

¹⁵²¹ Or, Oshi-wake, i.e., perhaps "Great Lord."

¹⁵²² I-ho-ki no iri-bime no mikoto. Signification obscure.

¹⁵²³ Toyo-to-wake no mikoto, i.e., perhaps "luxuriant swift prince."

¹⁵²⁴ Nunoshiro no iratsumo. Signification obscure.

¹⁵²⁵ Nunaki no iratsume. Signification obscure.

¹⁵²⁶ Kago yori-hime no mikoto. Yori ime probably means "good princess." The sense of kago is very doubtful, for it may either be the name of a place, or else identical with the Verb kagayaku "to shine," or with kago, "a stag."

¹⁵²⁷ Waka-ki no iri-biko no mikoto. The signification of this name is obscure.

¹⁵²⁸ Kibi no ye-hike no mikoto.

¹⁵²⁹ Takaki-hime no mikoto. The meaning of takaki in this place is not certain.

¹⁵³⁰ Oto-hime no mikoto, i.e., "the younger princes."

King Toyo-kuni-wake.¹⁵³² Again wedding the Younger Lady of Inabi,¹⁵³³ younger sister of the Elder Lady of Inabi,¹⁵³⁴ he begot august children: King Ma-waka; next King Hiko-hito-no-oho-ye.¹⁵³⁵ Again wedding Princess Ka-guro,¹⁵³⁶ daughter of King Princess Sume-iro-oho-naka-tsu-hiko,¹⁵³⁷ great-grand-child of His Augustness Yamato-take,¹⁵³⁸ he begot an august child: King Oho-ye.¹⁵³⁹ The august children of this Heavenly Sovereign Oho-tarashi-hiko numbered in all twenty-one kings and queens¹⁵⁴⁰ of whom there is a register, and fifty-nine kings and queens of whom there is no record,—eighty kings and queens altogether, out of whom His Augustness Waka-tarashi-hiko and also His Augustness Yamato-take, and also His Augustness Prince I-ho-ki-no-iri,—these three Kings,—bore the name of Heirs Apparent.¹⁵⁴¹ The seventy-seven kings and queens beside these¹⁵⁴² were all granted Rulerships in the various lands, or else [posts as] Lords, Territorial Lords or Departmental Chiefs.¹⁵⁴³ So His Augustness Waka-tarashi-hiko [was he who afterward] ruled the Empire. His Augustness Wo-usu subdued the savage deities and likewise the unsubmissive people in the East [204] and West. The next, King Kushi-tsunu-wake (was the ancestor of the chiefs of Mamuta).¹⁵⁴⁴ The next, His Augustness Oho-Uso, (was the ancestor of the Dukes of Mori,¹⁵⁴⁵ of the Dukes of Ohta¹⁵⁴⁶ and of the Dukes of Shimada.)¹⁵⁴⁷ The next, King Kamukushi, (was the ancestor of the Sakabe Abiko in the Land of Ki,¹⁵⁴⁸ and of the ¹⁵³¹ Himuka no Mi-hakashi-bime. Mi-hakashi signifies "august sabre." See Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXVI, p. 11, for a gloss on this curious name.

¹⁵³² Toyo-kuni-wake no miko, i.e., perhaps "lord of the luxuriant land," or else "lord of the land of Toyo," the Emperor Kei-kō having, according to the account in the "Chronicles," spent some years fighting in South-Western Japan, where the province of Toyo is situated.

¹⁵³³ Inabi no waki-iratsume. See Note 2 to this Section.

¹⁵³⁴ Ma-waka no miko, i.e., "truly young prince."

¹⁵³⁵ Hiko-hito no oho-ye no miko. Hiko signifies "prince," hito is "person" (or here, according to Motowori, "headman"), and oho ye is "great elder brother."

¹⁵³⁶ Ka-guro-hime, i.e., probably "the black-haired princess."

¹⁵³⁷ Sume-iro-oho-naka-tsu-biko-no-mikoto. The signification of this name is not clear. Motowori identifies sume with the like-sounding Verb signifying "to be supreme." Oha-naka-tsu-hiko may signify "great middle prince," referring to the comparative ages of this prince and his brethren.

¹⁵³⁸ There is here an evident error in the genealogy, as it would make the emperor marry his own great-great-grand daughter! A guess of the editor of 1687 that for Yamato-take we should read Waka-take (a son of the Emperor Kō-rei) is approved by Motowori, and may be adopted as probably correct,—i.e. (what is but little likely) if this portion of the "Records" should eventually be proved to be historically trustworthy. The question is discussed by Motowori in Vol. XXVI, pp. 12-14. of his Commentary.

¹⁵³⁹ Oho-ye no miko. This name would, as Motowori remarks, appear to have erroneously crept in here through the influence of the name mentioned in Note 27, the whole account of this union with Princess Ka-guro being corrupt.

¹⁵⁴⁰ The Japanese term (王 miko) includes both males and females.

¹⁵⁴² As above remarked, the Japanese term includes both males and females, and moreover some of the female children are specially mentioned. The difficulty as to how females could have been appointed to the offices here mentioned is not solved by Motowori, whose note on this passage is evasive.

¹⁵⁴³ The four names of offices (also used as "gentile names") here mentioned are in the original Japanese Kuni no Miyatsuko, Wake, Inaki, and Agata-mushi. (See Introduction, p. xvi.)

¹⁵⁴⁴ Mamuta no murazhi. (See Sect. LIII, Note 1.)

¹⁵⁴⁵ Mori no kimi. Mori seems to be the name of a place (perhaps in Mino); but nothing is known of this family.

¹⁵⁴⁶ Ohta no kimi. Ohta is the name of a place in Mino, and signifies "great rice-field."

¹⁵⁴⁷ Shimada no kimi. Shimada is perhaps the name of a place in Wohari. It signifies "island rice-fields."

¹⁵⁴⁸ Ki no kuni no sakabe no abiko. For also see Sect. LXXII, Note 85. Sakabe seems to signify "liquor tribe," this family and the next having been entrusted with the management of the Imperial feasts.

Sakabe of Uda). ¹⁵⁴⁹ The next, King Toyo-kuni-wake (was the ancestor of the Rulers of the Land of Himuka.) ¹⁵⁵⁰

¹⁵⁴⁹ Uda no sakabe, i.e., the "Liquor Tribe of Uda." (in Yamato).
¹⁵⁵⁰ Himuka no kuni no miyatsuko.

SECTION LXXVII.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART II.—THE MAIDENS YE-HIME AND OTO-HIME)

Hereupon the Heavenly Sovereign, to assure himself of what he had heard of the beauty of the two maidens Ye-hime and Oto-hime, ¹⁵⁵¹ daughters of King Kamu-ohone, ¹⁵⁵² ancestor of the Rulers of the Land of Minu, ¹⁵⁵³ sent his august child, His Augustness Oho-usu, to summon them up [to the Capital]. So His Augustness Oho-usu who had been sent, instead of summoning them up, forthwith wedded both the maidens himself, and then sought other women, to whom he falsely gave the maidens' names, and sent them up [to his father]. Hereupon the Heavenly Sovereign, knowing them to be other women, frequently subjected them to his long glances; ¹⁵⁵⁴ but, never wedding them, caused them to sorrow. So the child that His Augustness Oho-usu begot on wedding Ye-hime, was King Oshi-kuro-no-ye-hiko ¹⁵⁵⁵ (he was the ancestor of the Lords of Unesu in Minu.) ¹⁵⁵⁶ Again, the child that he begot on wedding Oto-hime, was King Oshi-kuro-no-oto-hiko (he was the ancestor of the Dukes of Mugetsu.) ¹⁵⁵⁷

¹⁵⁵¹ I.e., the elder princess and the younger princess.

¹⁵⁵² See Sect. LXII, Note 36.

¹⁵⁵³ Minu no kuni no miyatsuko.

¹⁵⁵⁴ I.e., "gazed at them intently." The Classical word nagamuru, "to gaze," is properly a compound of naga, "long," and miru, "to see."

¹⁵⁵⁵ The meaning of the syllables oshi in this name and the companion one (Oshi-kuro no oto hiko) immediately below is probably "great;" kuro is obscure; ye-hiko signifies "elder prince" and oto-hiko "younger prince."

¹⁵⁵⁶ Mimi no Unesu no wake. Of Unesu nothing is known.

¹⁵⁵⁷ Mugetsu no kimi. Mugetsu or Muge was in the province of Mini (Mino).

SECTION LXXVIII.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART III. VARIOUS DEEDS.)

In this august reign the Labourers' Tribe ¹⁵⁵⁸ was established; again, the port of Aha in the East was established; again, the Great Butlers' Tribe ¹⁵⁵⁹ was established; again, the granaries of Yamato were established; again, the Pool of Sakate was made, and bamboos planted on the bank. ¹⁵⁶⁰

¹⁵⁵⁸ Such is the reasonable explanation of the original term tabe (国部) given by Motowori. It seems to have become a "gentile-name."

¹⁵⁵⁹ Kashikade no oho-tomo-be. This "gentile name" originally denoted one who was butler, steward, or cook, in the Emperor's household. The tradition of its origin is preserved in the "Chronicles."

¹⁵⁶⁰ Motowori supposes that the mention both in his history and in the "Chronicles of Japan" of the planting of bamboos on the banks of this pool or lake should be attributed to the rarity of such a proceeding in ancient times.

SECTION LXXIX.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART IV.— YAMATO-TAKE SLAYS HIS ELDER BROTHER)

The Heavenly Sovereign said to His Augustness Wo-usu: "Why does not thine elder brother come forth to the morning and evening great august repasts? ¹⁵⁶¹ Be thou the one to take the trouble to teach him [his duty]." Thus he commanded; but for five days after, still [the prince] came not forth. Then the Heavenly Sovereign deigned to ask His Augustness Wo-usu [saying]: "Why is thine elder brother so long of coming? Hast thou perchance not yet taught him [his duty]?" He replied, saying: "I have been at that trouble." Again [the Heavenly Sovereign] said "How didst thou take the trouble?" ¹⁵⁶² He replied, saying: "In the early morning when he went into the privy, I grasped hold of him and crushed him, and, pulling off his limbs, ¹⁵⁶³ wrapped them in matting and flung them away."

¹⁵⁶¹ Viz., to attend on his Imperial father.

¹⁵⁶² I.e., "How didst thou do it?"

¹⁵⁶³ Literally, "branches."

SECTION LXXX. EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART V.—YAMATO-TAKE SLAYS THE KUMASO BRAVOES)

Thereupon the Heavenly Sovereign, alarmed at the valour and ferocity of his august child's disposition, commanded him, saying: "In the West there are two Kumaso bravo¹⁵⁶⁴es, 1¹⁵⁶⁴—unsubmissive and disrespectful men. So take¹⁵⁶⁵ them,"—and [with this command] he sent him off. It happened that at this time his august hair was bound at the brow.¹⁵⁶⁶ Then His Augustness Wo-usu was granted by his aunt Her Augustness Yamato-hime¹⁵⁶⁷ her august [upper] garment and august skirt; and, with a sabre hidden in his august bosom, he went forth.¹⁵⁶⁸ So, on reaching the house of the Kumaso bravo¹⁵⁶⁹es, he saw that near the house there was a three-fold belt of warriors, who had made a cave¹⁵⁷⁰ to dwell in. Hereupon they, noisily discussing a rejoicing for the august cave,¹⁵⁷⁰ were getting food ready. So [Prince Wo-usu sauntered about the neighbourhood, waiting for the day of the rejoicing. Then when the day of the rejoicing came, having combed down after the manner of girls his august hair which was bound up,¹⁵⁷¹ and having put on his aunt's august [upper] garment and august skirt, he looked quite like a young girl, and, standing amidst the women,¹⁵⁷² went inside the cave. Then the elder brother and the younger brother, the two Kumaso bravo¹⁵⁷³es, delighted at the sight of the maiden, set her between them, and rejoiced exuberantly. So, when [the feast was] at its height, [His Augustness Wo-usu], drawing the sabre from his bosom, and catching Kumaso¹⁵⁷³ by the collar of his garment, thrust the sabre through his chest, whereupon, alarmed at the sight, the younger bravo ran out. But pursuing after and reaching him at the bottom of the steps¹⁵⁷⁴ of the cave, and catching him by the back,¹⁵⁷⁵ [Prince Wo-usu] thrust the sabre through his buttock. Then the Kumaso bravo spoke, saying: "Do not move the sword; I¹⁵⁷⁶ have something to say." Then [His Augustness Wo-usu], respited him for a moment, holding him down [as he lay] prostrate. Hereupon [the bravo] said: "Who is Thine Augustness?" Then he said: "I am the august child of Oho-tarashi-hiko-oshiro-wake, the Heavenly Sovereign who, dwelling in the palace of Hishiro at Makimuku, rules the Land of the Eight Great Islands;

¹⁵⁶⁴ I.e., presumably "bravo^{es} at Kumaso; "but it is to be remarked that in this and like compounds with takeru ("bravo") the Japanese language uses no Postposition. For Kumaso see Sect. V, Note 17.

¹⁵⁶⁵ Motowori seems right in interpreting "take" here and elsewhere in the sense of "slay." But "take" is in the text.

¹⁵⁶⁶ I.e., caught up from the brow and tied together on the crown of the head. This being the way in which the hair of boys was dressed, the author thus intimates that His Augustness was still a youth.

¹⁵⁶⁷ Who was high-priestess of the temple of the Great Deity of Ise, as mentioned in Sect. LXIX (Note 44).

¹⁵⁶⁸ The characters used for these last two words are those properly restricted to the mention of an Imperial progress, but Yamato-take is constantly spoken of as if he had actually sat on the throne.

¹⁵⁶⁹ The character used is 室, which simply means apartment; but see Sect. XLVIII, Note 1.

¹⁵⁷⁰ Motowori reads "New cave," but the word "August" is in the text. At the same time we see that this feast was intended as a house-warming. Conf. the commencement of Sect. CLXIV.

¹⁵⁷¹ The parallel passage of the "Chronicles" puts the same meaning into plainer words. It says: "undid his hair, and made it appear like a girl's."

¹⁵⁷² Or, according to the old reading, "mixing with the concubines."

¹⁵⁷³ I.e., the elder bravo of Kumaso.

¹⁵⁷⁴ The word rendered "steps" is of doubtful interpretation.

¹⁵⁷⁵ Or perhaps "the skin of his back" or "the (beast's?) skin on his back." But Motowori is probably right in supposing the character 皮, "skin" to be an error for 以, "with," to be construed with the word "sabre." (In the English idiom this Particle falls away.)

and my name is King Yamato-wo-guna. Hearing that you two [fellows ¹⁵⁷⁷], the Kumaso bravo, were unsubmitive and disrespectful, [the Heavenly Sovereign] sent me with the command to take and slay you." Then the Kumaso bravo said: "That must be true. There are no persons in the West so brave and strong as we two. ¹⁵⁷⁸ Yet in the Land of Great Yamato there is a man braver than we two,—there is. ¹⁵⁷⁹ Therefore will I offer thee an august name. From this time forward it is right that thou be praised as the August Child Yamato-take." ¹⁵⁸⁰ As soon as he had finished saying this, [the Prince] ripped him up ¹⁵⁸¹ like a ripe melon, ¹⁵⁸² and slew him. ¹⁵⁸³ So thenceforward he was praised by being called by the august name of ¹⁵⁸⁴ his Augustness Yamato-take. When he returned up [to the capital] after doing this, he subdued and pacified every one of the Deities of the mountains and of the Deities of the rivers and likewise of the Deities of Anado, ¹⁵⁸⁵ and then went up to [the capital].

¹⁵⁷⁷ The contemptuous Second Personal Pronoun ore is used here and in the next clause.

¹⁵⁷⁸ There is Motowori's authority for thus understanding the bravo's words. Taken still more literally, they would seem to imply that there were no brave and strong men in the West excepting himself and his brother.

¹⁵⁷⁹ The words "there is" are an attempt at rendering the termination keri of the original. See X, Note 1.

¹⁵⁸⁰ I.e., "Yamato-Brave," q.d., "the Bravest in Yamato." It is by this name that the hero is commonly spoken of. Remember that "august child" signifies prince.

¹⁵⁸¹ 折, "broke," in the text is, as the commentators observe, an evident error for 桥, "ripped."

¹⁵⁸² Or specifically, the "musk melon."

¹⁵⁸³ The translator has followed Motowori's restoration of this passage, in which, by the transposition of the characters 也 and 故, the end of this sentence and the beginning of the next were mixed together in the older editions.

¹⁵⁸⁴ Lit., "[they] praised the august name, calling him," etc.

¹⁵⁸⁵ Or, "of the Ana passage" (lit. door), the modern Strait of Shimonoseki. The word ana signifies "hole," and there is a tradition (which Motowori quotes in his note on this name in Vol. XXVII, pp. 26-29 of his Commentary) to the effect that formerly the Main land and the island of Kiushiu were continuous at this point, there being only a sort of natural tunnel, through which junks could pass.

SECTION LXXXI.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART VI.— YAMATO-TAKE SLAYS THE IDZUMO BRAVO)

Forthwith entering the Land of Idzumo, and wishing to slay the Idzumo bravo, he on arriving, forthwith bound [himself to him in] friendship. So, having secretly made [the wood of] an oak [-trees ¹⁵⁸⁶] into a false sword and augustly girded it, he went with the bravo to bathe the River Hi. ¹⁵⁸⁷ Then, His Augustness Yamato-take getting out of the river first, and taking and girding on the sword that the Idzumo bravo had taken off and laid down, said: "Let us exchange swords!" So afterwards the Idzumo bravo, getting out of the river, girded on His Augustness Yamato-take's false sword. Hereupon His Augustness Yamato-take, suggested, saying: "Come on! let us cross ¹⁵⁸⁸ swords." Then on drawing his sword, the Idzumo bravo could not draw the false sword. Forthwith His Augustness Yamato-take drew his sword and slew the Idzumo bravo. Then he sang augustly, saying:

"Alas that the sword girded on the Idzumo bravo, and wound round with many a creeper, should have had no true blade!" ¹⁵⁸⁹

So having thus extirpated the [bravoes] and made [the land] orderly, he went up [to the capital], and made his report [to the Heavenly Sovereign].

¹⁵⁸⁶ The species mentioned (ichihi) is the Quercus gilva.

¹⁵⁸⁷ See Sect. XVIII, Note 2.

¹⁵⁸⁸ Lit., "let us join swords." The word "suggested" (誂) in this sentence is an emendation of Motowori's, the text having 誂, "slandered." The older printed editions, while retaining the character 誂, read it azamukite, "deceived."

¹⁵⁸⁹ In its position in the present text, this Song must be taken as an ironical lament of the Prince for the dead bravo. In the "Chronicle" the time and the heroes of the episode, and the singers of the Song are all different, and in that context the lament sounds like a genuine one. The reader will remember what was said in the Introduction as to the use of creepers for string. That mentioned in the text is supposed to be the Cocculus thunbergi.

SECTION LXXXII.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART VII.— YAMATO-TAKE IS SENT TO SUBDUE THE EAST, AND VISITS HIS AUNT AT ISE)

Then the Heavenly Sovereign again urged a command on His Augustness Yamato-take, saying: "Subdue and pacify the savage Deities and likewise the unsubmissive people of the twelve roads of the East;" ¹⁵⁹⁰ and when he sent him off, joining to him Prince Mi-suki-tomo-mimi-take, ¹⁵⁹¹ ancestor of the Grandees of Kibi, ¹⁵⁹² he bestowed on him a holly-wood ¹⁵⁹³ spear eight fathoms [long]. So when he had received the [Imperial] command and started off, he went into the temple of the Great August Deity of Ise, and worshipped the Deity's court, ¹⁵⁹⁴ forthwith speaking to his aunt, Her Augustness Yamato-hime, saying: "It must surely be that the Heavenly Sovereign thinks ¹⁵⁹⁵ I may die quickly; for after sending me to smite the wicked people of the West, I am no sooner come up again [to the capital] than, without bestowing on me an army, he now sends me off afresh to pacify the wicked people of the twelve circuits of the East. Consequently I think that he certainly thinks I shall die quickly." When he departed with lamentations and tears, Her Augustness Yamato-hime bestowed on him the "Herb-Quelling-Sabre," ¹⁵⁹⁶ and likewise bestowed on him an august bag, ¹⁵⁹⁷ and said: "If there should be an emergency, open the mouth of the bag."

¹⁵⁹⁰ See Sect. LXVI. Note 2.

¹⁵⁹¹ Mi-suki-tomo-mimi-take-hiko. Mi is an Honorific, mimi probably signifies "ears," and take means "bravo." The words suki and tomo are obscure.

¹⁵⁹² Kibi na omi.

¹⁵⁹³ Properly the Olea aquifolium, which resembles holly. Motowori supposes that an entirely wooden spear or stick is here meant to be spoken of, and not the weapon with a metal point which is commonly understood by the word "spear" (hoko).

¹⁵⁹⁴ Perhaps we should write "august court," for the characters 朝廷 in the text are evidently intended for the homonymous 御門. The court in front of the Deity's temple is what is here alluded to, and it would perhaps be a not unpardonable departure from the text to insert the Preposition "at," or "in," and translate thus: "worshipped in the Deity's court."

¹⁵⁹⁵ Here and below, the word "thinks," may be understood to mean "wishes."

¹⁵⁹⁶ Kusa-nagi no tsurugi. The discovery of this sword by the deity Susa-no wo ("Impetuous Male") inside one of the tails of the eight-headed serpent which he had slain, is narrated at the end of Sect. XVIII.

¹⁵⁹⁷ The use of the contents of this bag will be seen in the next Section.

SECTION LXXXIII.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART VIII.— YAMATO-TAKE SLAYS THE RULERS OF SAGAMU.)

So reaching the Land of Wohari, he went into the house of Princess Miyadzu, ¹⁵⁹⁸ ancestress of the Rulers of Wohari, ¹⁵⁹⁹ and forthwith thought to wed her; but thinking again that he would wed her when he should return up [toward the capital], and having plighted his troth, he went [on] into the Eastern Lands, and subdued and pacified all the savage Deities and unsubmissive people of the mountains and rivers. So then, when he reached the Land of Sagamu, ¹⁶⁰⁰ the Ruler of the land lied, saying: "In the middle of this moor is a great lagoon, and the Deity that dwells in the middle of the lagoon is a very violent Deity." Hereupon [Yamato-take] entered the moor to see the Deity. Then the Ruler of the land set fire to the moor. So, knowing that he had been deceived, he opened the mouth of the bag which his aunt, Her Augustness Yamato-hime had bestowed on him, and saw that inside of it there was a fire-striker. ¹⁶⁰¹ Hereupon he first mowed away the herbage with his august sword, took the fire-striker and struck out fire, and, kindling a counter-fire, burnt [the herbage] and drove back [the other fire], and returned forth, and killed and destroyed all the Rulers ¹⁶⁰² of that Land, and forthwith set fire to and burnt them. So [that place] is now called Yakidzu. ¹⁶⁰³

¹⁵⁹⁸ Miyazu-hime (in the "Chronicles" and in the printed editions of these "Records" previous to Motowori's written Miyasu-hime without the nigori). Neither Motowori nor Tanigaha Shisei makes any suggestion as to the signification of this name.

¹⁵⁹⁹ Wohari no miyatsuko.

¹⁶⁰⁰ In the present time Sagami. No authority great or small has given a satisfactory etymology of this name, though numerous and elaborate attempts have been made to explain it.

¹⁶⁰¹ In the original hi-uchi (火打). Mr. Satow, who has given a translation of this passage in a note to his third paper on the "Rituals" to be found in Vol. IX, Pt. II. p. 202 of these "Transaction," renders this word by "steel." The present writer prefers not to prejudge the question as to whether the fire-striker "intended by the author was a steel, or a wooden fire-drill. Motowori would seem to have held the latter view, as in his gloss on this passage he refers to the previous passage near the end of Sect. XXXII, where the fire-drill is explicitly mentioned. He also quotes an ancient one in which "a fire-striker of metal" is specially referred to, so that it would seem that all fire-strikers were not of that material.

¹⁶⁰² Remember that this word "Ruler" (Miyatsuko) had the acceptance of a "gentile name" as well as of the name of an office, so that we may understand the author to mean that Yamato-take destroyed the whole Ruling Family of Sagami. Parallel passage of the "Chronicles" has "he burnt all that rebel band, and destroyed them."

¹⁶⁰³ The words rendered "that place" are supplied by Motowori, their omission being evidently a copyist's error. Yaki-dzu signifies "the port of burning."

SECTION LXXXIV.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART IX.— YAMATO-TAKE'S EMPRESS STILL THE WAVES

When he thence penetrated on, and crossed the sea of Hashiri-midzu, ¹⁶⁰⁴ the Deity of that crossing raised the waves, tossing the ship so that it could not proceed across. Then [Yamato-take's] Empress, ¹⁶⁰⁵ whose name was Her Augustness Princess Oto-tachibana ¹⁶⁰⁶ said: "I ¹⁶⁰⁷ will enter the sea instead of the august child. ¹⁶⁰⁸ The august child must complete the service ¹⁶⁰⁹ on which he has been sent, and take back a report [to the Heavenly Sovereign]." When she was about to enter the sea, she spread eight thicknesses of sedge rugs, ¹⁶¹⁰ eight thicknesses of skin rugs and eight thicknesses of silk rugs on the top of the waves, and sat down on the top [of them] Thereupon the violent waves at once went down, and the august ship was able to proceed. Then the Empress sang, saying:

"Ah! thou [whom I] enquired of, standing in the midst of the flames of the fire burning on the little moor of Sagamu, where the true peak pierces!" ¹⁶¹¹

So seven days afterwards the Empress's august comb drifted onto the sea-beach,—
Which comb was forthwith taken and placed in an august mausoleum which was made.

¹⁶⁰⁴ i.e., "running water."

¹⁶⁰⁵ i.e., his consort. Conf. Sect. ???, Note 5.

¹⁶⁰⁶ Oto-tachibana-hime no mikoto. (See Sect. XCII, Note 3.)

¹⁶⁰⁷ Written with the humble character 妾, literally "concubine."

¹⁶⁰⁸ i.e., instead of thee, the Prince."

¹⁶⁰⁹ More literally, "finish the government."

¹⁶¹⁰ Or "mats." But the same word is used as that which must be translated "rugs" immediately below.

¹⁶¹¹ This Song gives much trouble to the commentators, whose remarks (to be found in Motowori's "Commentary." Vol. XXVII, pp. 67-9, and Moribe's "Idzu no Koto-Waki" Vol. III, pp. 6-9,) should be consulted by the student desirous of forming an opinion of his own. The general purport of the poem is of course to allude to Yamato-take's adventure on the burning moor, and at the same time to the love which bound him and his consort together; almost each individual line offers matter for doubt. Thus it is not certain whether the Verb tohishi, here rendered "enquired of" (i.e., attended upon by the Empress). should not rather be given the word "thou" as subject, in which case the signification would be "thou who enquiredst of [i.e., wooedst]." The word used for "thou;" is the Honorific equivalent of that Pronoun signifying literally "prince." Moribe disputes the propriety of considering Sagamu in this place as the name of a province, and the word saneshashi, here translated "where the true peak pierces" (Mt. Fuji being by some supposed to be thus alluded to) is of very doubtful interpretation. Motowori tells us that the final Particles ha mo, rendered by the initial Interjection "Oh," should here be understood as an exclamation more forcible than that which usually belongs to him. Finally Moribe points out that the Song does not suit the context in which it is found, and has probably been erroneously inserted here instead of in an earlier portion of the text.

SECTION LXXXV.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART X.—YAMATO-TAKE SLAYS THE DEITY OF THE ASHIGARA PASS.)

When, having thence penetrated on and subdued all the savage Yemishi ¹⁶¹² and likewise pacified all the savage Deities of the mountains and rivers, he was returning up [to the capital], he, on reaching the foot of the Ashigara Pass, ¹⁶¹³ was eating his august provisions, when the Deity of the pass, transformed into a white deer, came and stood [before him]. Then forthwith, on his waiting ¹⁶¹⁴ and striking [the deer] with a scrap of wild chive, ¹⁶¹⁵ [the deer] was hit in the eye and struck dead. So, mounting to the top of the pass, he sighed three times and spoke, saying: "Adzuma ha ya!" ¹⁶¹⁶ So that land is called by the name of Adzuma.

¹⁶¹² This is the traditional ancient reading of what is according to the modern pronunciation Yezo, while the Chinese characters 蝦夷, with which the name is written, signify "Prawn Barbarians," in allusion (if Motowori may be trusted) to the long beards which make their faces resemble a prawn's head. The hairy barbarians known to English readers as Ainos, and whose name of Yezo is applied by the Japanese to the northernmost large island of the Japanese Archipelago, which is still chiefly tenanted by them, are almost certainly here referred to. In ancient times they inhabited a great part of the Main Island of Japan. The translator may add that the genuineness of the so-called ancient reading "Yemishi" appears to him doubtful. The name known to the people themselves, and which apparently can be traced as far as Kamschatka, is Yezo.

¹⁶¹⁴ I.e., lying in ambush.

¹⁶¹⁵ Nira, the Allium odorum.

¹⁶¹⁶ I.e., "my wife! "Adzuma is still used as a poetical designation of Eastern Japan. The translator doubts the correctness of the derivation of it given in the text, although it is universally accepted and certainly fits in well with the graceful legend by which it is here accounted for.

SECTION LXXXVI.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART XI.— YAMATO-TAKE DWELLS IN THE PALACE OF SAKAWORI.)

When, forthwith crossing over from that land out into Kahi, ¹⁶¹⁷ he dwelt in the palace of Sakawori, ¹⁶¹⁸ he sang, saying:

"How many nights have I slept since passing Nihibari and Tsukuha?" ¹⁶¹⁹

Then the old man, who was the lighter of the august fire, ¹⁶²⁰ completed the august Song, and sang, saying:

"Oh! having put the days in a row, there are of nights nine nights, and of days ten days!" ¹⁶²¹

Therefore [Yamato-take] praised the old man, and forthwith bestowed [on him] the Rulership of the Eastern Land[s]. ¹⁶²²

¹⁶¹⁷ This name is identified by the native etymology with an homonymous Substantive signifying "a place between mountains."

¹⁶¹⁸ The etymology of this name is uncertain. But the most likely opinion is that it signifies "a zigzag road down a pass."

¹⁶¹⁹ I.e., since leaving the province of Hitachi, of which Tsukuha (in modern parlance Tsukuba, with the last syllable nigori'ed) and Nihibari (modern Nihibaru) are two districts. In the later poetry Nibari no is often used as a Pillow-Word for the name of Mount Tsukuba. The etymology of both names is uncertain, but "newly tilled" seems to be the most probable etymology of the first of the two.

¹⁶²⁰ Not necessarily a fire kindled for the sake of obtaining warmth, but fire in general, including, as Motowori suggests, torches and fires lit to drive away mosquitoes. There are frequent mentions in the classical literature of this latter sort of fire, which may indeed still be met with in some districts where mosquito-nets are not yet in common use.

¹⁶²¹ The meaning is: "On counting up, I find that we have been ten days and nine nights."—Previous to Motowori the expression ka-ga nabette, "having put in a row (i.e. counted) the days" was curiously misunderstood, and subjected to various far-fetched interpretations. There can however be no doubt but that Motowori is right.—The reason why the old man is said to have "completed" "the Prince's song is that the former taken alone is of incomplete rhythm.

¹⁶²² Or, as Motowori would prefer to consider it, "the Rulership of an Eastern Land," viz., one out of the twelve Eastern provinces.

SECTION LXXXVII.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART XII.— YAMATO-TAKE WOES PRINCESS MIYAZU)

Having crossed over from that land into the land of Shinanu ¹⁶²³ and subdued the Deity of the Shinanu pass, ¹⁶²⁴ he came back to the land of Wohari, and went to dwell in the house of Princess Miyazu, to whom he had before plighted his troth. Hereupon, when presenting to him the great august food, Princess Miyazu lifted up a great liquor-cup and presented it to him. Tunc Heræ Miyazu veli oræ adhæserunt menstrua. Quare [Augustus Yamato-take] ilia menstrua vidit, et auguste cecinit, dicens:

"Ego volui reclinare [caput] in fragili, molli brachiolo [tuo, quod est simile] vallo impingenti acutæ falci in Monte Kagu in cœlo formato quasi cucurbita;—ego desideravi dormire [tecum]. Sed in orâ veli quod induis luna surrexit." ¹⁶²⁵

Tunc Heræ Miyazu augusto cantui respondit, dicens: "Altè resplendentis solis auguste puer! Placidè administrationem faciens mi magne domine! Renovatis annis venientibus et effluentibus, renovatæ lunæ eunt veniendo patienter expecto, luna suapte surgit in orâ veli quod ego induo!" ¹⁶²⁶

¹⁶²³ See Sect. XXXIII, Note 26.

¹⁶²⁴ Shinanu no saka, a pass between the provinces of Shinano and Mino which is no longer used.

¹⁶²⁵ Even taken apart from its immediate context, the import of this Song is plain, notwithstanding Moribe's efforts to explain away its indelicacy. The details of the first part, however, require some comment in order to make them comprehensible to the European reader, the words in question being these which might in English be rendered "thy fragile, slender, delicate arm [which resembles] a post striking against the sharp sickle on Mount Kagu of the gourd-shaped heaven." In Japanese they run thus:

Hisa-kata no

Ame no Kagu-yamo

To-kama ni

Sa-wataru kuhi:—

Hiha-boso

Ta-wayaga-hina wo etc.

It will be remarked that the first four lines form a "Punning Preface" to the fifth. Such Punning Prefaces have not necessarily any logical connection with what follows, as has been explained by the present writer in a paper "On the Use of Pillow Words and Plays upon Words in Japanese Poetry," to be found in Vol. V, Pt. I, pp. 79 et seq. of these "Transactions." In this particular case, however, there is sufficient continuity of sense to warrant the continuous translation above given. The word "post," though such a use of it is very curious, must be understood to denote not a dead, but a living trunk, or rather the stem of some delicate plant or grass which falls beneath the sickle of the mower on Mount Kagu in Heaven, or, as it may better be understood, on the Heavenly Mount Kagu [in Yamato]. "Gourd-shaped" is the translation of hisa-kata no or hisa-gata no, the Pillow-Word for "heaven." Its meaning is disputed, but Mabuchi in his "Dictionary of Pillow-Words" and Motowori agree in giving to it the sense here adopted (see the above-mentioned paper "On the Use of Pillow-Words, etc.," p. 81).

¹⁶²⁶ The total sense of this Song is quite plain.—In the first lines of it the Prince is addressed as if he were the reigning sovereign. The words placidè administrationem faciens represent the Japanese yasumishishi, the Pillow-Word for wa ga oho-kimi, "my great lord." Elsewhere the English rendering "who tranquilly carries on the government" has been adopted. The word aratama no, rendered by the Adjective renovatis, is the Pillow-Word for "sun," "moon" and "year," and is of not quite certain import. The interpretation here adopted has, however, for it the weight of probability and of native authority, Mabuchi in his "Dictionary of Pillow-Words" deriving it from the Verb aratamaru, "to be renewed."

Quare tune [ille] coivit [cum illâ], after which, placing in Princess Miyazu's house his august sword "the Grass-Quelling Sabre," he went forth ¹⁶²⁷ to take the Deity of [Mount] Ibuki. ¹⁶²⁸

¹⁶²⁷ The characters in the text might also be rendered "he made a progress," as they are those only properly applied to the movements of a reigning sovereign. Here and elsewhere, they are used in speaking of Yamato-take. (Conf. Sect. LXXX, Note 5.)

¹⁶²⁸ On the frontier of Afumi (Omi) and Mince Ibuki seems to signify "blowing," in allusion, it is said, to the pestilential breath or influence of the god by whom the place was tenanted. The word rendered "Mount "is supplied by the editor of 1687.

SECTION LXXXVIII.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART XIII.— YAMATO-TAKE MEETS THE DEITY OF MOUNT IBUKI)

Hereupon he said: "As for the Deity of this mountain, I will simply take him empty-handed." ¹⁶²⁹—and was ascending the mountain, when there met him on the mountain-side a white boar whose size was like unto that of a bull. ¹⁶³⁰ Then he lifted up words, ¹⁶³¹ and said: "This creature that is transformed into a white boar must be a messenger from the Deity. ¹⁶³² Though I slay it not now, I will slay it when I return,"—and [so saying.] ascended. Thereupon the Deity caused heavy ice-rain ¹⁶³³ to fall, striking and perplexing His Augustness Yamato-take. (This creature transformed into a white boar was not a messenger from the Deity, but the very Deity in person. Owing to the lifting up of words, he appeared and misled [Yamato-take. ¹⁶³⁴]) So when, on descending back, he reached the fresh spring of Tama-kuro-be ¹⁶³⁵ and rested there, his august heart awoke somewhat. ¹⁶³⁶ So that fresh spring is called by the name of the fresh spring of Wi-same.

¹⁶²⁹ I.e., without weapons, and specially without the magic sword which he had left behind in Princess Miyazu's house.

¹⁶³⁰ Or "ox," or "cow," the original word not distinguishing between the sexes.

¹⁶³¹ The Japanese expression kota-age shite, here rendered "lifted up. words," very frequently has the signification of "lifting up a prayer" to some superhuman being. In this passage, however, it conveys no more than its proper etymological meaning.

¹⁶³² Viz., the god of Mount Ibuki.

¹⁶³³ Perhaps "hail" may be intended by this expression, and so Motowori decides. But this interpretation of the term seems to agree well with the Song in Sect. CXLII.

¹⁶³⁴ The commentators disagree as to whether this note should or should not be considered to form part of the original text. Motowori so considers it. He however, in the opinion of the translator, is not happy in his alteration of the kana reading given by the editor of 1687, which latter has accordingly been followed in the English version.

¹⁶³⁵ The literal meaning of this name is "jewel-store-tribe;" but complete uncertainty attaches both to the etymology of the word and to the position of the place. The first printed edition has Tama-kuhi-be.

¹⁶³⁶ He had been misled and dazed, but now came to himself again. Thence, according to the etymology of our author, the name of Wi-same, which signifies "dwelling (resting) and awaking," given to the spring.

SECTION LXXXIX. EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART XIV.—THE DEATH OF YAMATO-TAKE)

When he departed thence and reached the moor of Tagi ¹⁶³⁷ he said: "Whereas my heart always felt like flying through the sky, my legs are now unable to walk. They have become rudder-shaped." ¹⁶³⁸ So that place was called by the name of Tagi. Owing to his being very weary with progressing a little further beyond that place, he leant upon an august staff to walk a little. So that place is called by the name of the Tsuwetsuki pass. ¹⁶³⁹ On arriving at the single pine-tree on Cape Wotsu, ¹⁶⁴⁰ an august sword, which he had forgotten at that place before when augustly eating, ¹⁶⁴¹ was still [there] not lost. Then he augustly sang, saying:

"O mine elder brother, the single pine-tree that art on Cape Wotsu which directly faces Mohari! If thou, single pine-tree! wert a person, I would gird [my] sword [upon thee], I would clothe thee with [my] garments,—O mine elder brother, the single pine-tree!" ¹⁶⁴²

When he departed thence and reached the village of Mihe, ¹⁶⁴³ he again said: "My legs are like three-fold crooks, ¹⁶⁴⁴ and very weary." So that place was called by the name of Mihe. When he departed thence and reached the moor of Nobe, ¹⁶⁴⁵ he, regretting ¹⁶⁴⁶ [his native] land, ¹⁶⁴⁷ sang, saying:

"As for Yamato, the most secluded of lands—Yamato, retired behind Mount Awogaki encompassing it with its folds is delightful!" ¹⁶⁴⁸

¹⁶³⁷ Tagi-nu. We might, following the Chinese characters, translate thus; "and arrived on the Moor of Tagi." But the character 上 has in this context scarcely any meaning. The real etymology of Tagi (in classical and modern parlance taki without the nigori) is "rapid" or "waterfall," the cascade formed by the river Vo-ro in Mino being alluded to. The derivation in the next sentence of the text from tagishi supposed to mean "a rudder" is a mere fancy.

¹⁶³⁸ The word here fended "rudder" is tagishi, which is written phonetically and does not occur elsewhere, except in a few Proper Names of doubtful import. There is however some probability in favour of the meaning assigned to it by the native commentators.

¹⁶³⁹ Tzuwe-tsuki-zaka, i.e., "the pass of leaning on a staff." It is in the province of Ise between Yokaichi and Ishiyakushi.

¹⁶⁴⁰ Wotsu-no-saki, in the province of Ise. The name probably signifies "° harbour of the mountain declivity."

¹⁶⁴¹ The former portion of the text tells us nothing either of the meal or of the sword here mentioned.

¹⁶⁴² This quaintly simple and apparently very ancient poem needs no elucidation.

¹⁶⁴³ In Ise. Mihe signifies "three fold."

¹⁶⁴⁴ This is the literal rendering of the text. Motowori thinks, however, that we should understand that there were various swellings on his legs, such as would be produced if the limb were tightly tied round with cord in three places.

¹⁶⁴⁵ Nobo-un in the province of Ise. The name seems to signify "the moor of mounting."

¹⁶⁴⁶ The Chinese character here used signifies simply "thinking of;" but in such a context its common Japanese interpretation is "loving" or "regretting," and so Motowori means us to understand it when he reads shinukashite.

¹⁶⁴⁷ Viz., Yamato.

¹⁶⁴⁸ This Song and the two following form but one in the pages of the "Chronicles," where they appear with several verbal differences, and are attributed, not to the Prince, but to his father the Emperor. Moribe decides that in the latter particular the text of these "Records" gives the preferable account, but that the "Chronicles" are right in making the three Songs one continuous poem. The expression "this Song is a Land-Regretting Song" strongly supports this view; for, though we might also render in the Plural "these Songs are, etc.," such a translation would be less natural, as in similar cases the numeral is used, thus p. 273 "these two Songs are,

Again he sang, saying:

"Let those whose life may be complete stick [in their hair] as a head-dress the leaves of the bear-oak from Mount Heguri,—those children!"

This song is a Land-Regretting Song. ¹⁶⁴⁹ Again he sang, saying:

"How sweet! ah! from the direction of home clouds are rising and coming!"

This is an Incomplete Song. ¹⁶⁵⁰ At this time, his august sickness was very urgent. Then, he sang augustly, saying:

"The sabre-sword which I placed at the maiden's bed-side, alas! that sword!" ¹⁶⁵¹

As soon as he had finished singing, he died, Then a courier was despatched [to the Heavenly Sovereign.]

etc." The expression "this is an Incomplete Song" points as decidedly to some mutilation of the original document, from which the compiler of the "Records" copied this passage. Taking then the three Songs as one, the entire drift is that of a paean on Yamato, the poet's native land, which he could not hope ever to see again:—Commencing by praising its still seclusion as it lies there behind its barrier of protecting mountains, he goes on to mention the rural pleasures enjoyed by those who, wandering over the hill-sides, deck their hair with garlands of leaves and flowers. For himself indeed these delights are no more; "but," says he, "do you, ye children full of health and happiness, pursue your innocent enjoyment!" In conclusion he, lovingly apostrophises the clouds which, rising up from the south-west, are, as it were, messengers from home. The word mahoroha, rendered "secluded," is a great crux to the commentators, and Motowori's "Examination of the Synonyms of Japan," pp. 17-18. and Moribe's "Idzu no Koto Waki," Vol. III, p. 31, should be consulted by the student desirous of forming his own opinion on the point. Another apparent difficulty is the word gomoreru, whose position in the sentence Motowori seems to have misunderstood. By following Moribe, and taking it as a compound with the word Awogaki-yama into Awogaki yama-gomoreru the difficulty vanishes, and we are likewise relieved from the necessity of supposing anything so highly improbable as that the Verb komoreru when not compounded, should have commenced with a nigori'ed syllable. "Complete" signifies "healthy." Mount Heguri is preceded in the original by tatamikomo (Moribe reads tatamigomo with the nigori) a Pillow-Word whose import is disputed. In any case, being a punning one, it cannot be translated. For the "bear-oak" see Sect. LXXII, Note 19. Moribe labours, but without success, to prove that "come," the last word of the translation, signifies "go," and imagines that the prince is expressing his envy of the clouds which are rising and going off in the direction of the home which he will never revisit.

¹⁶⁴⁹ i.e., a Song of loving regret for his native land.

¹⁶⁵⁰ "Incomplete Song" must be understood as the designation of a poem of a certain number of lines, viz, three, and was probably given by comparison with the greater length of poetical compositions in general.

¹⁶⁵¹ This poem is an exclamation of distress at the thought of the sword which he had left with his mistress Princess Miyazu and which, if he had had it with him, would doubtless have preserved him from the evil influences of the god of Mount Ibuki, which were the beginning of p. 274 his end.—"Sabre-sword" (tsurugi no tachi) is a curious expression, which Moribe thinks means "double-edged sword."

SECTION XC.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART XV.—YAMATO-TAKE TURNS INTO A WHITE BIRD)

Thereupon [his] Empresses ¹⁶⁵² and likewise [his] august children, who dwelt in Yamato, all went down ¹⁶⁵³ and built an august mausoleum, and, forthwith crawling hither and thither in the rice-fields encompassing [the mausoleum]. sobbed out a Song, saying:

"The Dioscorea quinqueloba crawling hither and thither among the rice-stubble, among the rice-stubble in the rice-fields encompassing [the mausoleum] . . ." ¹⁶⁵⁴

Thereupon [the dead prince], turning into a white dotterel ¹⁶⁵⁵ eight fathoms [long], and soaring up to Heaven, flew off towards the shore. Then the Empress and likewise the august children, though they tore their feet treading on the stubble of the bamboo-grass, forgot the pain, and pursued him with lamentations. At that time they sang, saying:

"Our loins are impeded in the plain [over-grown with] short bamboo-grass. We are not going through the sky, but oh! we are on foot." ¹⁶⁵⁶

Again when they entered the salt sea, ¹⁶⁵⁷ and suffered as they went, they sang, saying.

"As we go through the sea, our loins are impeded,—tottering in the sea like herbs growing in a great river-bed." ¹⁶⁵⁸

Again when [the bird] flew and perched on the sea-side, they sang, saying:

"The dotterel of the beach goes not on the beach, but follows the seaside." ¹⁶⁵⁹

¹⁶⁵² I.e., wives. It will be remembered that the historian habitually mentions Yamato-take as if he had been Emperor.

¹⁶⁵³ Q.d., to the land of Ise.

¹⁶⁵⁴ The drift of the Song is a comparison of the; helpless wanderings of the mourners in the neighbourhood of the tomb to the convolutions of the Dioscorea quinqueloba (a creeping plant) growing among the rice in the adjacent fields. But there are evidently some lines omitted. If we were to adopt the elegant verses conjecturally supplied by Moribe, the entire translation would run thus: "The Dioscorea quinqueloba crawl hither and thither among the rice-stubble, among the rice-stubble in the rice-fields encompassing [the mausoleum]; but though like it, we crawl hither and thither, and weep and speak to thee, thou answerest not a word."—Moribe supposes this poem to be the Empress's composition, and the following three to have proceeded from the children.

¹⁶⁵⁶ The signification of this Song is: "It is easy enough for thee, thou bird-spirit! to fly through the air. But remember that we are on foot, and that our feet are getting torn by the short stubble of the bamboo-grass (Bambusa shino)."

¹⁶⁵⁷ When the bird flew over the sea, they too waded after it through the waves.

¹⁶⁵⁸ The signification of the Song is: "As we pursue thee through the sea, we sink in the waves up to our middles, and totter like the water-plants against "which strikes the current of a great river."—The word uwe-gusa, lit. "herbs planted," is curious; but it simply means "herbs growing," as in the translation (conf. our word "plant"). The latter part of the poem is in the original highly elliptical.

These four Songs were all sung at [Yamato-take's] august interment. So to the present day these Songs are sung at the great interment of a Heavenly Sovereign. So [the bird] flew off from that country, ¹⁶⁶⁰ and stopped at Shiki in the land of Kafuchi. ¹⁶⁶¹ So they made an august mausoleum there, and laid [Yamato-take] to rest. ¹⁶⁶² Forthwith that august mausoleum was called by the name of the "August-Mausoleum of the White-Bird." ¹⁶⁶³ Nevertheless the bird soared up thence to heaven again, and flew away.

¹⁶⁵⁹ The point of the Song seems to rest on a delicate distinction between the words hama, "beach" and iso, "seaside," which does not obtain in the later Japanese language any more than it does in English.

Both hama and iso, "beach" and "seaside," denote the boundary-line between sea and land; but we must suppose with the commentators that while the former was used with special reference to the land, the latter considered the idea (so to speak) from the point of view of the sea. The import of the song is therefore to upbraid the bird for flying over the waves instead of flying along the adjacent shore.

¹⁶⁶⁰ I.e., says Motowori, from Ise.

¹⁶⁶¹ Not to be confounded with the Shiki in Yamato, which is written with different phonetic character.

¹⁶⁶² The Verb used in the original is shizumeru, "to repress," "to quiet," "to lay," "to establish," hence "to build a temple to a god," "to worship." The grammatical vagueness of the Japanese language helps in all this passage to preserve the connection of ideas in a manner which it is difficult to render in an English translation. Using no pronouns, it does not require to specialise in each instance whether it is the bird that is meant, or Yamato-take, but the two are confounded together in language as they were in thought.

¹⁶⁶³ Shira-tori no misasaki. According to the parallel passage of the "Chronicles," it was not only this tomb in Kafuchi, but the previously mentioned tomb at Nobonu, and also another in Yamato, which were severally known by this designation.

SECTION XCI.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART XVI.—YAMATO-TAKE'S BUTLER)

During all the time that this [Prince] His Augustness Yamato-take went about pacifying countries, Nana-tsuka-hagi, ¹⁶⁶⁴ ancestor of the Suzerains of Kuna, ¹⁶⁶⁵ always followed and respectfully served him as butler.

¹⁶⁶⁴ The name signifies "seven-grasp shins," implying that the worthy here mentioned was so big and strong as to have shins seven hand-breadths in length. For the use of the word "grasp" as a measure of length, see Sect. VIII, Note 1.

¹⁶⁶⁵ This family has already been mentioned at the end of Sect. XXXIV, as descended from Ama-tsu-kume no Mikoto, one of the companions of the Emperor Jim-mu's grandfather on the occasion of his descent from Heaven. But see Note 7 to that Sect. for the probable mistake with regard to the origin of the name.

SECTION XCII.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART XVII.— YAMATO-TAKE'S DESCENDANTS)

This [Prince] His Augustness Yamato-take wedded Her Augustness Princess Futaji-no-iri, ¹⁶⁶⁶ daughter of the Heavenly Sovereign Ikume, and begot an august child: His Augustness Tarashi-naka-tsu-hiko ¹⁶⁶⁷ (one Deity). Again, wedding Her Augustness Princess Oto-tachibana ¹⁶⁶⁸ who [afterwards] entered the sea, ¹⁶⁶⁹ he begot an august child: King Waka-take ¹⁶⁷⁰ (one Deity). Again, wedding Princess Futaji, ¹⁶⁷¹ daughter of Oho-tamu-wake, ¹⁶⁷² ancestor of the Rulers of the Land of Yasu in Chika-tsu-Afumi, ¹⁶⁷³ he begot an august child: King Ine-yori-wake ¹⁶⁷⁴ (one Deity). Again, wedding Princess Oho-kibi-take, ¹⁶⁷⁵ younger sister of Take-hiko [ancestor of the] Grandees of Kiki, ¹⁶⁷⁶ he begot an august child: King Take-kahiko ¹⁶⁷⁷ (one Deity). Again, wedding Princess Kukuma-mori of Yamashiro, ¹⁶⁷⁸ he begot an august child, King Ashi-kagami-wake ¹⁶⁷⁹ (one Deity). A child by another wife was King Okinaga-ta-wake. ¹⁶⁸⁰ Altogether the entire [number] of the august children of His Augustness Yamato-take was six Deities. So His Augustness Tarashi-naka-tsu-hiko [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. The next, King Ine-yori-wake (was the ancestor of the Dukes of Inukami ¹⁶⁸¹ and of the Dukes of Takebe.) ¹⁶⁸² The next, King Take-kahiko (was the ancestor of the Dukes of Aya in Sanugi, ¹⁶⁸³ the Dukes of Wake in Iyo, ¹⁶⁸⁴ the Lords of Towo, ¹⁶⁸⁵ the Headmen of Masa ¹⁶⁸⁶ and the Lords of Miyaji.) ¹⁶⁸⁷ King Ashi-kagami-¹⁶⁶⁶ For this name see Sect. LXIX, Note 24.

¹⁶⁶⁷ I.e., "the perfect middle prince," a name which is justified by the genealogy as given in the "Chronicles," where he is mentioned as the second of three sons borne by this princess.

¹⁶⁶⁸ Oto-tachibana-hime no mikoto. Oto signifies "younger [sister]," and Oto-tachibana is the name of the orange.

¹⁶⁶⁹ See the story in Sect. LXXXIV.

¹⁶⁷⁰ Waka-tate no miko. This name signifies "young brave."

¹⁶⁷¹ Futaji-hime. Signification obscure. Futaji may be the name of a place.

¹⁶⁷² If Tamu is, as Motowori surmises, the name of a place, this personal name signifies "Great Lord of Tamu."

¹⁶⁷³ Chika-tsu-Afumi no Yasu no kuni no miyatsuko. For Yasu see Sect. LXII, Note 62.

¹⁶⁷⁴ Ine-yori-wake no miko. This name probably signifies "rice-good-lord."

¹⁶⁷⁵ Oho-kibi-take-hime. Oho signifies "great." For the other two elements of the compound see next Note.

¹⁶⁷⁶ The text has Kibi no omi Take-hiko, as if this worthy had been himself the "Grandee of Kibi." Motowori however compares the commencement of Sect. LXXXII (Notes 2 and 3), and supplies the words "ancestor of." Kibi is of course the province of that name (the modern, Bizen, Bitchiū, and Bingo), and take signifies "brave."

¹⁶⁷⁷ Take-kahiko no miko. Take signifies "brave," kahiko is either "egg" or "cocoon," or else perhaps a corruption of some other word.

¹⁶⁷⁸ Yamashiro no Kukuma mori-hime. This name is obscure. Motowori identifies Kukuma with a place called Kurihuma, and mori is probably the Verb "to guard."

¹⁶⁷⁹ Ashi-kagami-wake no miko. This name is written with characters signifying "foot-mirror-[lord]."

¹⁶⁸⁰ Okinaga-ta-wake no miko. This name is obscure. Motowori believes Okinaga to be the name of a place in Afumi, but has no explanation to offer of ta.

¹⁶⁸¹ Inukami no kimi. Inukami is the name of a district in Afumi, its signification is not clear.

¹⁶⁸² Takebi no kimi. Takebe became the name of a place in Idzumo, but it originally signified "brave tribe," the family having, as in so many other cases, given its name to the place of its residence, instead of being called after the latter. See the origin of the name, given in Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXIV, pp. 35-36.

¹⁶⁸³ Sanugi no Aya no kimi. For Sanugi see Sect. V, Note 6. Aya is a district in the province; the name is of doubtful origin.

¹⁶⁸⁴ Iyo no wake no kani. For Iyo see Sect. V, Note 4. (The text here has Ise for Iyo, and the word wake is missing, but Motowori's emendation may be accepted). Wake is the name of a district in Iyo.

¹⁶⁸⁵ Towo no wake. Of Towo nothing is known.

wake (was the ancestor of the Lords of Kamakura, ¹⁶⁸⁸ the Dukes of Wodzu, ¹⁶⁸⁹ the Lords of Ihashiro ¹⁶⁹⁰ and the Lords of Fukita.) ¹⁶⁹¹ The child of the next, King Okinagata-wake was King Kuhi-mata-naga-hiko. ¹⁶⁹² This King's children were: Her Augustness Princess Ihinu-ma-guro, ¹⁶⁹³ next Okinaga-ma-waka-naka-tsu-hime, ¹⁶⁹⁴ next Oto-hime ¹⁶⁹⁵ (three Deities). So the above mentioned King Waka-take wedded Princess Ihinu-ma-guro, and begot King Sume-iro-oho-naka-tsu-hiko. ¹⁶⁹⁶ This King wedded Princess Shibanu, ¹⁶⁹⁷ daughter of Shibanu-iri-ki ¹⁶⁹⁸ of Afumi, and begot a child, Her Augustness Princess Kaguro. ¹⁶⁹⁹ So the Heavenly Sovereign Oho-tarashi-hiko wedded this [lady] Her Augustness Princess Kaguro, and begot King Oho-ye ¹⁷⁰⁰ (one Deity). This King wedded his younger half-sister Queen Shiro-kane, ¹⁷⁰¹ and begot children: King Oho-na-gata, ¹⁷⁰² and next Her Augustness Oho-naka-tsu-hime ¹⁷⁰³ (two Deities). So this [Lady] Her Augustness Oho-naka-tsu-hime was the august mother ¹⁷⁰⁴ of King Kagosaka ¹⁷⁰⁵ and King Oshikuma. ¹⁷⁰⁶ ¹⁶⁸⁶ Masa no obito. Of Masa nothing is known.

¹⁶⁸⁷ Miyagi (宮道) no wake. This is Motowori's ingenious emendation of the characters in the text, 宮首, out of which it is impossible to make a family name. Miyagi is the name of a place in the province of Mikaha, and signifies "temple road."

¹⁶⁸⁸ Kamakura no wake. Kamakura is the name of a district in the province of Sagami, which became famous during the Middle Ages as the site of an immense town,—the capital of the Shōgun, and the centre of the feudalism which then ruled Japan. The import of the name (literally "sickle-store") is not clear, though it has been fancifully explained by native etymologists.

¹⁶⁸⁹ Wodzu no kimi. The words no kimi are supplied by Motowori, this name and the next being in the text run into one. Wodzu seems to be the name of a place in Afumi, and signifies "little mart."

¹⁶⁹⁰ Ihashiro no wake. Motowori says that this Ihashiro is not the province of that name, but a place in Kishiu. The meaning of the name is obscure.

¹⁶⁹¹ Fukita no wake. This is but Motowori's conjectural restoration (founded on a statement in the "Chronicles of Old Matters of Former Ages") of the name as given in the text, 瀧田.

¹⁶⁹² Kuhimata-naga-hiko no miko. Kuhimata (modern Kumata) is the name of a place in Settsu. The signification is obscure. Naga-hiko means "long prince."

¹⁶⁹³ Ihinu-ma-guro-hime, i.e., "quite black princess of Ihinu," the blackness being doubtless predicated of her hair. Ihinu is the name of a district in Ise, and is written with characters signifying "boiled-rice-moor."

¹⁶⁹⁴ For Okinaga see Note 15. Ma-waka means "truly young." Naka-tsu-hime means "middle princess," referring to her being the second of three.

¹⁶⁹⁵ i.e., "younger princess."

¹⁶⁹⁶ See Sect. LXXVI, Note 29.

¹⁶⁹⁷ Shibanu-hime. This name is obscure.

¹⁶⁹⁸ Shibunu iri-ko. This name is obscure.

¹⁶⁹⁹ Ka-gara hime, see Sect. LXXVI, Note 28.

¹⁷⁰⁰ For the confusion in this portion of the genealogy see Sect. LXXVI, Note 30.

¹⁷⁰¹ Shiro-kane no miko. Shiro-kane means "silver," but Motowori suspects corruption in the text.

¹⁷⁰² Oho-nagata no miko, i.e., "great prince of Nagata," the latter being the name of a place in Settsu, signifying "long rice-field."

¹⁷⁰³ i.e., "great middle princess."

¹⁷⁰⁴ Literally, "ancestress."

¹⁷⁰⁵ Or, "the King of Kagosaka," for it is uncertain whether Kagosaka should or should not be regarded as the name of a place. The etymology of the name may be kago, "a stag" and saka, "an ascent." The original form of the name and title is Kagosaka no miko.

¹⁷⁰⁶ Or, "the King of Oshikuma," Oshikuma no miko. Oshikuma is a word of doubtful etymology.

SECTION XCIII.—EMPEROR KEI-KŌ (PART XVIII. HIS AGE AND PLACE OF BURIAL)

This Heavenly Sovereign's august years were one hundred and thirty-seven, and his august mausoleum is above the Yamanobe road. ¹⁷⁰⁷

¹⁷⁰⁷ See Sect. LXVIII, Note 1.

SECTION XCIV.—EMPEROR SEI-MU

The Heavenly Sovereign Wata-tarashi-hiko dwelt at the palace of Taka-anaho at Shiga ¹⁷⁰⁸ in Chika-tsu-Afumi and ruled the empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded the Lady Oho-takara, ¹⁷⁰⁹ daughter of Take-oshiyama-tari-ne, ¹⁷¹⁰ ancestor of the Grandees of Hodzumi, ¹⁷¹¹ and begot an august child: King Wata-nuke ¹⁷¹² (one Deity). So [the Heavenly Sovereign] raised the Noble Take-uchi ¹⁷¹³ [to the office of] Prince Minister, ¹⁷¹⁴ deigned to settle the Rulers of the Great Countries and Small Countries, ¹⁷¹⁵ and likewise deigned to settle the boundaries of the various countries, as also the Department Lords of the Great Departments and Small Departments. ¹⁷¹⁶ The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were ninety-five, and his august mausoleum is at Tatanami near Saki. ¹⁷¹⁷

¹⁷⁰⁸ Shiga no Taka-anaho. Shiga is the name of a well known district, and is of uncertain, signification, as is also Taka-anaho. For Chika-tsu-Afumi see Sect. XXIX, Note 20.

¹⁷⁰⁹ Oto-takara no iratsume. Oto signifies "younger [sister]," and takara is "treasure."

¹⁷¹⁰ Oshiyama is the name of a place in Ise, take signifies "brave" and tari and ne are Honorifics of frequent occurrence.

¹⁷¹¹ Hodzumi no omi. See Sect. LXI, Note 4.

¹⁷¹² Waka-nuke no miko. This name is of doubtful signification, and Motowori suspects that it is corrupt, and that the true reading would be Waka-take, "young-brave."

¹⁷¹³ See Sect. LXI, Note 25

¹⁷¹⁴ 大臣. Motowori tries to prove that in the earliest times this official title was simply an Honorific surname formed by prefixing the Adjective 大 "great" to 臣, a surname read "Omi" (the character signifies properly "attendant," "subject.") Probably like other "gentile names" it combined both characters, and had a tendency to become hereditary.

¹⁷¹⁵ Oho-kuni wo-kuni no kuni no miyatsuko.

¹⁷¹⁶ Oho-agata wo-agata no agata nushi (大縣小縣縣主). Their duties are supposed to have consisted in supervising the government farms.

¹⁷¹⁷ For Saki see Sect. LXXV, Note 5. Tatanami may perhaps signify "putting shields in a row."

SECTION XCV.—EMPEROR CHIŪ-AI (PART I.— GENEALOGIES)

The Heavenly Sovereign Tarashi-naka-tsu-hiko dwelt at the palace of Toyora at Anado, ¹⁷¹⁸ and likewise at the palace of Kashihi ¹⁷¹⁹ in Tsukushi, and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded Her Augustness Oho-naka-tsu-hime, ¹⁷²⁰ daughter of King Oho-ye, and begot august children: King Kagosaka and King Oshikuma (two Deities). Again he wedded Her Augustness Princess Okinaga-tarashi. This Empress ¹⁷²¹ gave birth to august children: His Augustness Homu-ya-wake, ¹⁷²² and next His Augustness Oho-tomo-wake, ¹⁷²³ another name for whom was His Augustness Homuda-wake. ¹⁷²⁴ The reason why this Heir Apparent ¹⁷²⁵ was given the august name of His Augustness Oho-tomo-wake was that when first ¹⁷²⁶ born, he had on his august arm [a protuberance of] flesh resembling an elbow-pad, ¹⁷²⁷ whence the august name bestowed on him. By this it was known while he was in the womb that he would rule countries. ¹⁷²⁸ In this august reign the granaries of Ahaji were established.

¹⁷¹⁸ For Anado see Sect. LXXX (Note 22). Toyora (for Toyo-ura) signifies "fertile shore."

¹⁷¹⁹ This name seems to be derived from that of the evergreen oak. It will be noticed that both these capitals are in the South-Western Island of Kiushiu, whereas, from Jim-mu downwards, the capitals of all the Emperors previously mentioned are either in Yamato or in one of the adjacent central provinces.

¹⁷²⁰ For this and the three following names see Sect. XCII, and for Okinaga tarashi Sect. LXII, Note 72.

¹⁷²¹ Written 大后. It is she who is celebrated in Japanese history under the name of Jin-gō Kōgō, and in the "Chronicles" her reign is counted separately. In these "Records," however, the period of her rule is forming part of the reign of her son O-jin.

¹⁷²² The signification of this name is obscure.

¹⁷²³ I.e., "great elbow-pad lord," tomo signifying "elbow pad." The next sentence of the text gives the traditional origin of this curious name.

¹⁷²⁴ I.e., lord of Homuda. Homuda is supposed by Motowori and Moribe to be the name of a place, they (apparently with reason) rejecting as a late addition a note to the "Chronicles," which states that homuda was synonymous with tomo "elbow-pad."

¹⁷²⁵ For "heir apparent" see Sect. XXXIII, Note 2.

¹⁷²⁶ This word, says Motowori, is redundant.

¹⁷²⁷ For the use of elbow-pads in war see Sect XIII, Note 7.

¹⁷²⁸ The word rendered "rule" (shiru, 知) is supplied by the editor of 1687. Motowori supplies the evident lacuna in the text by the word "establish" (sadamaru 定); but this seems less good. Motowori's reasons for taking the word kuni ("country") in the Plural are, however, convincing,—the three countries into which Korea was anciently divided, and which are appropriately designated by the title of San Kan (三韓), being evidently designated by the expression in the text, as may be seen both by reference to the parallel passage in the "Chronicles," and also by considering that in this manner that warlike implement the elbow-pad, with the semblance of which the young Emperor was born, obtains its proper significance. This Emperor (for it is he who is known as Ō-jin Ten-nō) is sometimes designated by the name of the "Emperor in the Womb" (胎中天皇).

SECTION XCVI. EMPEROR CHIŪ-AI (PART II.—THE POSSESSION OF KOREA DIVINELY PROMISED)

This Empress, Her Augustness Princess Okinaga-tarashi, was at that time, ¹⁷²⁹ divinely possessed. So when the Heavenly Sovereign, dwelling at the palace of Kashihi in Tsukushi, was about to smite the Land of Kumaso, ¹⁷³⁰ the Heavenly Sovereign played on his august lute, and the Prime Minister the Noble Take-uchi, being in the pure court, ¹⁷³¹ requested the divine orders. Hereupon the Empress, divinely possessed, charged him with this instruction and counsel: "There is a land to the Westward, and in that land is abundance of various treasures dazzling to the eye, from gold and silver downwards. ¹⁷³² I will now bestow this land upon thee." Then the Heavenly Sovereign replied, saying: "If one ascend to a high place and look Westward, no country is to be seen. There is only the great sea;" and saying, ¹⁷³³ "They are lying Deities," ¹⁷³⁴ he pushed away his august lute, did not play on it, and sat silent. Then the Deities were very angry, and said: "Altogether as for this empire, it is not a land over which thou oughtest to rule. Do thou go to the one road!" ¹⁷³⁵ Hereupon the Prince Minister the Noble Take-uchi said; "[I am filled with] awe, my Heavenly Sovereign! ¹⁷³⁶ Continue playing thy great august lute." Then he slowly drew his august lute to him, and languidly played on it. So almost immediately the sound of the august lute became inaudible. On their forthwith lifting a light and looking, [the Heavenly Sovereign] was dead.

¹⁷²⁹ At what time, we are not told.

¹⁷³⁰ See Sect. V, Note 17.

¹⁷³¹ This is Motowori's interpretation of the obscure original word sa-niha, which is written phonetically. He supposes it to have been so called as being a place used for enquiring the will of the gods, and therefore kept clean and held in reverence. "Place" would perhaps represent the Japanese word niha as well as "court," though "court" has been its usual acceptance in later times.

¹⁷³² Literally, "making gold and silver the origin."

¹⁷³³ Motowori tells us to understand "saying" in the sense of "thinking."

¹⁷³⁴ As already frequently remarked, the Japanese mind does not occupy itself much with the distinction (to us all-important) of Singular and Plural. The reason why the translator renders the word kami by the Plural "Deities" throughout this passage is because we learn later on that four divine personages were intended by the author.

¹⁷³⁵ With the commentators we must accept this as an alternative name of Hades, without being able satisfactorily to explain it. The expression "eighty road-windings" (yaso kumado) in Sect. XXXII (Note 27) may be compared with this one.

¹⁷³⁶ I.e., "I tremble Sire, for the consequences of thine impiety."

SECTION XCVII.—EMPEROR CHIŪ-AI (PART III. PREPARATIONS FOR THE CONQUEST OF KOREA)

Then, astonished and alarmed, they set him in a mortuary palace, ¹⁷³⁷ and again taking the country's great offerings, ¹⁷³⁸ seeking out all sorts of crimes, such as flaying alive and flaying backwards, ¹⁷³⁹ breaking down the divisions of rice-fields, filling up ditches, evacuating excrements and urine, marriages between superiors and inferiors, ¹⁷⁴⁰ marriages with horses, marriages with cattle, marriages with fowls, and marriages with dogs, and having made a great purification of the land, ¹⁷⁴¹ the Noble Takeuchi again stood in the pure court and requested the Deities' commands. Thereupon the manner of their instruction and counsel was exactly the same as on the former day: "Altogether this land is a land to be ruled over by the august child in Thine Augustness's august womb." ¹⁷⁴² Then the Noble Take-uchi said, "[I am filled with] awe, my Great Deities] The august child in this Deity's womb, ¹⁷⁴³ what [sort of] child may it be?" [The Deities] replied, saying: "It is a male child." Then [the Noble Take-uchi] requested more particularly, [saying]: "I wish to know the august names of the Great Deities whose words have now thus instructed us." Forthwith [the Deities] replied, saying: "It is the august doing ¹⁷⁴⁴ of the Great-August-Heaven-Shining-Deity, likewise it is the three great Deities Bottom-Possessing-Male, Middle-Possessing Male and Surface-Possessing-Male. ¹⁷⁴⁵ (At this time the august names of these three great Deities were revealed. ¹⁷⁴⁶) If now thou truly thinkest to seek that land, thou must, after presenting the offerings ¹⁷⁴⁷ to every one of the Heavenly Deities and Earthly Deities, ¹⁷⁴⁸ and likewise of the Deities of the mountains and also of all the Deities of the river and of the sea, and setting our august spirits ¹⁷⁴⁹ on the top of thy vessel, put into

¹⁷³⁷ A temporary resting-place for the corpse before interment. (See Sect. XXXI, Note 20.)

¹⁷³⁸ Or, if, with Motowori, we take country in the Plural, "the great offerings of the countries," i.e., of the various countries or provinces of Japan or of Kiushiu. These "offerings" (nusa) are the same as those mentioned in Sect. XVI (Notes 24 and 25) under the names nigi-te and mitte-gura. They consisted of cloth, for which in later times paper has been substituted.

¹⁷³⁹ There are different views as to the exact bearing of this curious expression. Conf. Sect. XV, Note 10.

¹⁷⁴⁰ i.e., incest between parents and children.

¹⁷⁴¹ i.e., a general purification.

¹⁷⁴² The Deities now speak to, as well as through, the Empress. Before the quotation marks announcing their words we must understand some such clause as and they added this divine charge." It would p. 288 also be possible to translate the whole passage thus: "Thereupon the manner of their instruction and counsel. was '[Things] being exactly as on the former day, altogether this land,'" etc., etc.

¹⁷⁴³ i.e., in the Empress's womb. Motowori supposes that she is thus spoken of as a Deity on account of her being at that moment divinely possessed.

¹⁷⁴⁴ Literally, "heart."

¹⁷⁴⁵ Soko-dzu-tsu-no-wo, Naka-dzu-tsu-no-wo, and Uha-dzu-tsu-no-wo three of the deities born at the time of the purification of Izanagi (the "Male-Who-Invites") on his return from Hades, and known collectively as the Deities of the Inlet of Sumi. (See Sect. X, Notes 18 and 22). The grammar of this sentence is, as Motowori remarks, not lucid. One would expect the author to say that it was "the august doing" of all the four deities mentioned.

¹⁷⁴⁶ i.e., says Motowori, they then first informed Take-uchi who they were. Up in that time, it had not been known by what Deities the Empress was possessed. Mabuchi, however, rejected this gloss as a later additions.

¹⁷⁴⁷ i.e., the sacred offerings of white and blue cloth.

¹⁷⁴⁸ Here written with the Chinese locution 天神地祇, by some rendered "the Spirit of Heaven and Earth." Conf. Sect. I. Note II.

¹⁷⁴⁹ Here, as before, the Singular would be at least as natural an interpretation as the Plural. The three ocean-deities are supposed to be specially referred to, and in that case, the three being easily conceived as one (like gourds ¹⁷⁵⁰ the ashes of the podocarpus macrophylla tree, ¹⁷⁵¹ and likewise make a quantity of chopsticks and also of leaf platters, ¹⁷⁵² and must scatter them all on the waves of the great sea, that thou mayest cross over." So when [she] punctually fulfilled these instructions, equipped an army, marshalled [her vessels, and crossed over, the fishes of the sea-plain, both great and small, all bore the august vessels ¹⁷⁵³ across their backs, and a strong favourable wind arose, and the august vessel followed the billows.

the deified peaches mentioned in Sect. IX, Note 19) owing to the want of discrimination in Japanese between Singular and Plural, we might retain the Singular in English. Altogether the Sun-goddess seems out of place in this passage, and it would be satisfactory to have some authority for expunging from it the mention of her name.

¹⁷⁵⁰ Or, "into a gourd."

¹⁷⁵¹ In the original maki (真木). In modern ma-ki signifies the P. macrophylla, as in the translation. It is however uncertain whether that or the Chamæcyparis obtusa (both being conifers), or simply any "true" (i.e., good) tree is here intended by the author.

¹⁷⁵² I.e., broad shallow platters made of the oak-tree, and used for placing food on.

¹⁷⁵³ Viz., that in which the Empress herself took passage.

SECTION XCVIII.—EMPEROR CHIŪ-AI (PART IV.—THE EMPRESS JIN-GŌ CONQUERS KOREA)

So the wave ¹⁷⁵⁴ of the august vessel pushed up onto the land of Shiragi ¹⁷⁵⁵ reaching to the middle of the country. Thereupon the chieftain ¹⁷⁵⁶ of the country, alarmed and trembling, petitioned ¹⁷⁵⁷ [the Empress], saying: "From this time forward obedient to the Heavenly Sovereign's commands, I will feed his august horses and will marshal vessels every year, nor ever let the vessels' keels ¹⁷⁵⁸ dry or their poles and oars dry, and will respectfully serve him without drawing back while heaven and earth shall last." ¹⁷⁵⁹ So therefore the Land of Shiragi ¹⁷⁶⁰ was constituted the feeder of the august horses, and the Land of Kudara was constituted the crossing store. ¹⁷⁶¹ Then the Empress stuck her august staff on the gate of the chieftain of Shiragi, and having made the Rough August Spirits ¹⁷⁶² of the Great Deities of the Inlet of Sumi ¹⁷⁶³ the guardian Deities of the land, she laid them to rest, ¹⁷⁶⁴ and crossed back. So while this business ¹⁷⁶⁵ was yet unconcluded, [the child] with which she was pregnant was about to be born. Forthwith, in order to restrain her august womb, she took a stone and wound it round the waist of her august skirt, ¹⁷⁶⁶ and the august child was born after ¹⁷⁵⁴ I.e., "the wave on which the august vessel was riding."

¹⁷⁵⁵ In Sinico-Japanese Shin ra (新羅), one of the three states into which Korea was anciently divided, the other two being known in pure Japanese as Kudara and Koma (in Sinico-Japanese Hiyaku-sai 百濟 and Kōrai 高麗). Shiragi is evidently a mere corruption of the Sinico-Japanese form, which closely resembles the native Korean Shin-la. The origin of the pure Japanese forms of the other two names is obscure.

¹⁷⁵⁶ The editions previous to Motowori's have "King" (玉 instead of 主); but as the latter character is used in all parallel passages of this work, we must attribute the occurrence of the former in this single place to a copyist's error, and accuse the author rather than his commentator of the ill-natured degradation of the Korean King into a mere chieftain (more literally a "master").

¹⁷⁵⁷ The character 奏, which is here used, is that employed in speaking of a subject's addressing his sovereign.

¹⁷⁵⁸ Literally "bellies."

¹⁷⁵⁹ Literally, "with heaven and earth."

¹⁷⁶⁰ See Note 2.

¹⁷⁶¹ I.e., the sea-store." The author means to say that from the Land of Kudara tribute was to be paid with the regularity implied by the King's asseveration to the effect that the keels, poles, and oars of the [tribute-bearing] vessels should never remain dry.

¹⁷⁶² Ara-mi-tama, the antithetical term to which is Nigi-mi-tama, "Gentle August Spirit." We also find Saki-mi-tama and Kushi-mi-tama, which signify respectively "August Luck-Spirit" and "Wondrous August Spirit." In this passage it must be understood that the spirits which floated above the Imperial junk to protect it were the "Gentle August Spirits," while the "Rough August Spirits" presided at the Empress's feats of arms and kept the enemy in subjection. Motowori warns us not to fall into the mistake of supposing that the Rough and Gentle Spirits of a god were separate individualities, they being only, according to him, various manifestations of the same individuality. The student is advised to consult his beautifully written note on the subject of these spirits in Vol. XXX, pp. 72-76 of his Commentary.

¹⁷⁶³ See Sect. X Note 22.

¹⁷⁶⁴ Literally "established and worshipped." Motowori says that this mention of their being laid to rest is made with an implied reference to the journey on which the deities in question had accompanied the Imperial army. He also tries to prove that this laying to rest of the deities must have occurred after the return of the Empress to Japan, as it is not possible to suppose that the gods could find a home in a foreign land (!). But the wording of the text is against him

¹⁷⁶⁵ Literally "government"

¹⁷⁶⁶ I.e., as Motowori suggests, "she wrapped the stone up, and tied it into the waist of her skirt in something resembling a sash."

she had crossed [back] to the Land of Tsukushi. ¹⁷⁶⁷ So the name by which the place was called where the august child was born was Umi. ¹⁷⁶⁸ Again the stone which she wound round her august skirt is at the village of Ito ¹⁷⁶⁹ in the Land of Tsukushi.

¹⁷⁶⁷ In South-Western Japan.

¹⁷⁶⁸ I.e., "bearing." The word, however, also signifies "sea." According to the "Chronicles" the original name of the village was Kada.

¹⁷⁶⁹ This word signifies "thread," and would therefore, one might think, find a more appropriate place in the legend next narrated, where the "threads" of the Empress's garment are specially mentioned.

SECTION XCIX.—EMPEROR CHIŪ-AI (PART V.—THE EMPRESS JIN-GŌ FISHES IN TSUKUSHI)

Again when, having reached the village of Tamashima ¹⁷⁷⁰ in the Department of Matura ¹⁷⁷¹ in Tsukushi, she partook of an august meal on the bank of the river, it being then the first decade of the fourth moon, she then sat on a shoal ¹⁷⁷² in the middle of the river, picked out threads from her august skirt, used grains of rice as bait, and hooked the trout ¹⁷⁷³ in the river. (The name by which the river is called is the Wo-gaha; ¹⁷⁷⁴ again the name by which the shoal is called is Kachi-do-hime. ¹⁷⁷⁵) So down to the present time it is an uninterrupted [custom] for women in the first decade of the fourth moon to pick out threads from their skirts, use grains as bait, and hook trout.

¹⁷⁷⁰ I.e., "jewel-island."

¹⁷⁷¹ Matura-gata. The "Chronicles" give an absurd derivation of Matura from the Adjective medzurashi, "astonishing," which the Empress is supposed to have ejaculated on finding a trout hooked to her line! The obvious etymology is matsu-ura, "pine-beach."

¹⁷⁷² The character in the original is 磯 (for 磯), in Japanese iso, which may or may not be connected with the word ishi, "stone." In any case Motowori is not justified in saying that it must be understood to mean p. 292 "stone" in this place, as iso means rather a sandy than a stony place, rising above the water level.

¹⁷⁷³ In Japanese ayu, a small species of the salmon family (Plecoglossus altivelis).

¹⁷⁷⁴ I.e., "little river."

¹⁷⁷⁵ I.e., "princess of the gate of victory." But though the words lend themselves to this interpretation, it can hardly be supposed that such is their real etymology, and indeed the editor of 1687 draws attention in a Note to the difficulty of accepting the statement in the text.

SECTION C.—EMPEROR CHIŪ-AI (PART VI.—THE EMPRESS JIN-GŌ SUBDUES YAMATO)

Hereupon, when Her Augustness Princess Okinaga-tarashi was returning up to Yamato, she, owing to doubts concerning the disposition ¹⁷⁷⁶ of the people, prepared a mourning-vessel, ¹⁷⁷⁷ set the august child in that mourning-vessel, and let a report ooze out that the august child was already dead. While she went up thus, King Kagosaka and King Oshikuma, ¹⁷⁷⁸ having heard [of the circumstance], thought to waylay ¹⁷⁷⁹ her, went forth to the moor of Toga, ¹⁷⁸⁰ and hunted for an omen. Then King Kagosaka climbed up an oak-tree, ¹⁷⁸¹ and then ¹⁷⁸² a large and angry boar came forth, dug up the oak-tree, and forthwith devoured King Kagosaka. His younger brother, King Oshikuma, undaunted by this circumstance, raised an army and lay in wait [for the Empress], to close with the mourning-vessel as being an empty ¹⁷⁸³ vessel. Then an army was landed from the mourning-vessel, ¹⁷⁸⁴ and joined in combat [with the opposing forces]. At this time King Oshikuma made the Noble Isahi, ¹⁷⁸⁵ ancestor of the Kishi Clan of Naniha, ¹⁷⁸⁶ his generalissimo; ¹⁷⁸⁷ and on the august side of the Heir Apparent His Augustness Naniha-ne-ko-take-furu-kuma, ¹⁷⁸⁸ ancestor of the Grandees of Wani, ¹⁷⁸⁹ was made generalissimo. So when [the Empress's troops] had driven [King Oshikuma's troops] as far as Yamashiro, [the latter] turned and made a stand, and both [sides] fought together without retreating. Then His Augustness Take-furu-kuma planned, and caused it to be said that, as Her Augustness Okinaga-tarashi was already dead, there was no need for further fighting,—forthwith snapping his bowstrings and feigning submission. Therefore King Oshikuma's generalissimo, believing the falsehood, unbent his bows and put away his arms. Then [the Empress's troops] picked out of their topknots some prepared bowstrings (one name [of the bowstrings] was usa-yu-

¹⁷⁷⁶ Literally, "the hearts."

¹⁷⁷⁷ I.e., a boat or junk containing a coffin. We might also (adopting the interpretation given by the older editors to the character in this passage) translate by "specially prepared a mourning-vessel."

¹⁷⁷⁸ These two princes, who are first mentioned at the end of Sect. XCII (Notes 40 and 41), were, according to the story, elder sons of the late monarch Chiū-ai, and therefore step-sons of the Empress Jingō and half-brothers to the young Emperor Ō-jin.

¹⁷⁷⁹ Literally, "wait for and catch." This "catch" is always taken by Motowori to mean "slay."

¹⁷⁸⁰ Taga-nu. It was in the province of Settsu. The etymology of the name is obscure.

¹⁷⁸¹ The species mentioned in the text the Quercus serrata.

¹⁷⁸² Motowori's conjecture that the character 是, "then," is a copyist's error for 見, "saw" or "looked," seems hardly called for, and the translator has therefore not departed from the traditional reading.

¹⁷⁸³ I.e., defenceless, not filled with troops.

¹⁷⁸⁴ Which of course was in reality no mourning-vessel, but full of the soldiers who had just returned from conquering Korea.

¹⁷⁸⁵ Isahi no Sakune. Isahi or Isachi is supposed to mean "leading elder."

¹⁷⁸⁶ Naniha no Kishi be. Naniha is the old name of the sea and river-shore on which I now stands the town of Ohosaka. The name Kishi is said by Motowori to be properly a Korean official designation (吉士), but it is one whose origin is to be sought in China.

¹⁷⁸⁷ 將軍, Shōgun. This is the earliest mention of this office, which, passing from the military to the political sphere, played such a great part in the mediaeval and modern history of Japan.

¹⁷⁸⁸ The signification of all the elements of this compound name is not clear, but it is partly Honorific and descriptive of the bravery of its bearer.

¹⁷⁸⁹ Wani no omi (see Sect. LXII, Note 11).

dzuru; ¹⁷⁹⁰) stretched [their bows] again, and pursued and smote [the enemy]. So [these] fled away to Afusaka, ¹⁷⁹¹ rallied, and fought again. Then [the Empress's troops] pursued on, and defeated them, and cut to pieces that army at Sasanami. ¹⁷⁹² Thereupon King Oshikuma, together with the Noble Isahi, being pursued and pressed, got on board a vessel and floated on the sea, and sang, saying:

"Come on, my lord! rather than be stricken by Furu-kuma's hurtful hand, I will plunge like the grebe into the Sea of Afumi,—I will!" ¹⁷⁹³

Forthwith they plunged into the sea, and died together.

¹⁷⁹⁰ The text is here somewhat obscure, and the note in small print is of doubtful authenticity. If we retain it, we must understand it to mean that usa-yu-dzuru, a term whose derivation is by no means clear, was an alternative name of the make dzuru, i.e., "prepared bowstrings," such as they had brought with them concealed in their top-knots.

¹⁷⁹¹ i.e., "the pass [or hill] of meeting." It was on the boundaries of the provinces of Yamashiro and Afumi. The modern pronunciation is Osaka (not to be confounded with the like-sounding name of a well-known town in Central Japan).

¹⁷⁹² i.e., in Afumi. Mabuchi, in his "Dictionary of Pillow-Words," explains this name to mean "bamboo-grass bending." Motowori, following the Shim-puku-ji MS., alters the character 於 before the word Sasanami to 出, but without sufficient warrant.

¹⁷⁹³ The meaning of the poem is. "Rather than fall beneath the attacks of the enemy, let us drown ourselves in the Sea of Afumi" (Lake Biwa).—For the expression "stricken by a hurtful hand" see Sect. XLIV, Note 33.

SECTION CI.—EMPEROR CHIŪ-AI (PART VIII.—THE HEIR APPARENT EXCHANGES NAMES WITH THE GREAT DEITY IZASA-WAKE)

So when His Augustness the Noble Take-uchi, taking with him the Heir Apparent for the purpose of purification, ¹⁷⁹⁴ passed through the lands of Afumi and Wakasa, ¹⁷⁹⁵ he built a temporary palace at Tsunuga ¹⁷⁹⁶ at the mouth of the Road of Koshi ¹⁷⁹⁷ [for the Heir Apparent] to dwell in. Then His Augustness the Great Deity Izasa-wake, ¹⁷⁹⁸ who dwelt in that place, appeared at night in a dream, ¹⁷⁹⁹ and said: "I wish to exchange my name for the august name of the august child." Then [the dreamer of the dream] prayed, saying: "[I] am filled with awe! ¹⁸⁰⁰ The name shall be respectfully exchanged according to thy command." Again the Deity charged [him, saying]: "To-morrow morning [the Heir Apparent] must go out on the beach; I will present my [thank] offering for the name [given me] in exchange." So when [the Heir Apparent] went out in the morning to the beach, the whole shore was lined with broken-nosed dolphin-fishes. ¹⁸⁰¹ Thereupon the august child caused the Deity to be addressed, saying: "Thou bestowest on me fish of thine august food." ¹⁸⁰² So again his august name was honoured by his being called the Great Deity of August Food. ¹⁸⁰³ " So he is now styled the Food-Wondrous-Great-Deity. ¹⁸⁰⁴ Again the blood from the noses of the dolphin-fishes stank. So the strand was called by the name of Chiura. ¹⁸⁰⁵ it is now styled Tsunuga.

¹⁷⁹⁴ Viz., by water, as described in Sect. X.

¹⁷⁹⁵ Etymology obscure.

¹⁷⁹⁶ The marvellous etymology of this name which the author seems to adopt will be found at the end of the Section (Note 12). The compiler of the "Chronicles" is probably nearer the truth when he derives it from tsunuga, "horned stag."

¹⁷⁹⁷ For the meaning of this curious expression see Sect. LX, Note 20.

¹⁷⁹⁸ The commentators give no explanation of this one of the three names of the deity in question. It would appear to be made up of a word expressive of solicitation and of a portion of the Heir Apparent's name, thus signifying perhaps "Come on, Wake, [give me thy name]" with reference to the legend here narrated.

¹⁷⁹⁹ To which of the two personages of the legend is not clear. Motowori, however, prefers to suppose that it was to Take-uchi, as, if the prince himself were intended, the word "dream" would probably receive the Honorific 御.

¹⁸⁰⁰ Or, "I reverence [thy commands]."

¹⁸⁰¹ Motowori supposes that they were caught by being speared in the nose.

¹⁸⁰² I.e., "fish that would naturally have formed part of thine august food," is less good to translate by "fish for mine august food." As usual, the original Japanese text has no Personal Pronouns to guide the reader; but, though Emperors are sometimes made to use the Honorific in speaking of themselves, this is not the custom in the case of princes' and Ō-jin is supposed to have not yet assumed the Imperial dignity.

¹⁸⁰³ Mi-ke-tsu-oho-kami. Motowori mentions several Deities of this name, who were, according to him, separate beings.

¹⁸⁰⁴ Kehi no oho-kami. The meaning of the syllable hi, rendered by "wondrous" in accordance with Motowori's suggestion, is not certain.

¹⁸⁰⁵ I.e., "the strand of blood." From chi-ura Motowori is obliged to derive Tsunuga as well as he can in order not to throw discredit on the implied assertion of the author: that the latter is but a mispronunciation of the former. The true derivation of Tsunuga is probably from tsunuga "horned stag," as already stated in Note 3.

SECTION CII.—EMPEROR CHIŪ-AI (PART VIII.—THE EMPRESS JIN-GŌ PRESENTS LIQUOR TO THE HEIR APPARENT)

Hereupon, when the [Heir Apparent] returned up [to the Capital], his august parent, Her Augustness Princess Okinaga-tarashi, distilled some waiting-liquor, ¹⁸⁰⁶ and presented it to him. Then his august parent sang augustly, saying:

"This august liquor is not my august liquor;—oh! it is august liquor respectfully brought as a divine congratulation, a repeated congratulation, a bountiful congratulation, a reiterated congratulation by the Small August Deity, who dwells eternally, firmly standing. Partake not shallowly! Go on! go on!" ¹⁸⁰⁷

Having thus sung, she presented to him the great august liquor. Then His Augustness the Noble Takeuchi replied for the august child and sang, saying:

"Whatever person distilled this august liquor must surely have distilled it singing the while with that drum on the mortar,—must surely have distilled it dancing the while, for this august liquor, august liquor, to be ever more and more joyful. Go on! go on!" ¹⁸⁰⁸

These are Drinking Songs. ¹⁸⁰⁹

¹⁸⁰⁶ Machi-sake. This expression, which recurs in the poems of the "Collection of a Myriad Leaves," signifies liquor distilled for an absent friend by those who are awaiting his return.

¹⁸⁰⁷ The General signification of the Song is: "Think not that this liquor was made by me. 'Tis a present from the small August Deity (Suku-na-biko-no), who dwells forever in unshaken power and who sends p. 298 it to thee with endless congratulation. Come on! come on! drink deeply!"—Some of the expressions in this Song are a subject of debate among the commentators. Excepting the clause "partake not shallowly," in which the translator has adopted the opinion of the author of the "Explanation of the Songs in the Chronicles of Japan," Moribe's interpretation has been followed throughout. The latter critic would identify asazu ("not slowly") with amasazu ("without leaving anything"). But there seems no warrant for supposing such an elision of the syllable sa. The use of the expression karuhoshi and motohoshi to express reiteration is worthy of notice. It will be remembered that the Deity mentioned was the microscopic personage who came riding over the waves to share the sovereignty of Idzumo with the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land (see Sect. XXVII).

¹⁸⁰⁸ This Song signifies; "Such a joyful feast must surely have been preceded by a joyful distilling of the liquor for it. Continue to drink, oh Prince!"—The commentators disagree on the subject of one or two of the words of this Song, in which the translator has followed Motowori's interpretation throughout. The words "that drum" are the chief difficulty. Motowori supposes that drums, being originally unknown in Japan, were first seen by the Japanese on the occasion of the conquest of Korea in this very reign, and he thinks that the drum would be placed by the side of the mortar during the pounding of the rice out of which the liquor was to be made. "That drum" means the drum belonging to the pounder of the rice. The original words so no, "that," might also be rendered by "his."

¹⁸⁰⁹ Literally, "liquor-rejoicing songs."

SECTION CIII.—EMPEROR CHIŪ-AI (PART IX.—HIS DEATH AND THAT OF THE EMPRESS JIN-GŌ)

Altogether the august years of this Heavenly Sovereign Tarashi-naka-tsu-hiko ¹⁸¹⁰ were fifty-two. His august mausoleum is at Nagaye, ¹⁸¹¹ near Wega, ¹⁸¹² in Kafuchi. (The Empress died at the august age of one hundred. She was buried in the mausoleum of Tatanami in Saki. ¹⁸¹³)

¹⁸¹⁰ The Emperor Chiū-ai. The author of these "Records" not recognizing, p. 299 as does the author of the "Chronicles," the time during which the Empress Jin-gō held sway as a separate reign, Chiū-ai is by fiction supposed to have reigned down to the moment his posthumous son Ō-jin mounted the throne after the conquest of Korea and of Yamato.

¹⁸¹¹ i.e. "long branch," or perhaps "long inlet."

¹⁸¹² Etymology obscure.

¹⁸¹³ Mabuchi and Motowori seem right in supposing the sentence in small type to be an addition to the text, copied from the "Chronicles." But as all the MSS. and printed editions previous to Motowori's contain it, it has been retained in the translation.

SECTION CIV.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN¹⁸¹⁴ (PART 1.— GENEALOGIES)

His Augustness Homuda-wake dwelt at the palace of Akira at Karushima,¹⁸¹⁵ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded three¹⁸¹⁶ queens, daughters of King Homuda-no-Ma-waka,¹⁸¹⁷ the name of one of whom was Her Augustness Princess Takagi-no-iri;¹⁸¹⁸ of the next, Her Augustness Naka-tsu-hime;¹⁸¹⁹ and of the next, Her Augustness Oto-hime.¹⁸²⁰ (The father of these Queens, King Homuda-no-ma-Waka, was the son of His Augustness Prince Iho-ki-noiri,¹⁸²¹ by his wife Shiritsuki-tome,¹⁸²² daughter of the Noble Take-inada,¹⁸²³ ancestor of the Chiefs of Wohari.)¹⁸²⁴ So the august children of Her Augustness Princess Takagi-no-iri were: His Augustness Nakuta-no-oho-waka-tsu-hiko;¹⁸²⁵ next His Augustness Oho-yama-mori;¹⁸²⁶ next His Augustness Iza-no-ma-waka;¹⁸²⁷ next his younger sister the Lady of Ohohara;¹⁸²⁸ next the Lady of Komuku.¹⁸²⁹ (Five Deities). The august children of Her Augustness Naka-tsu-hime were: the Lady of Arata in Ki;¹⁸³⁰ next His Augustness Oho-sazaki;¹⁸³¹ next His Augustness Netori.¹⁸³² (Three Deities). The august children of Her Augustness Oto-hime were: the Lady Abe;¹⁸³³ next the Lady of Mihara in Ahaji;¹⁸³⁴ next ¹⁸¹⁴ Son of the Emperor Chiū-ai and the Empress Jin-gō.

¹⁸¹⁵ In Yamato. Akira Signifies "brilliant." Karushima seems to mean "the neighbourhood of Karu, Karu being the often mentioned place of that name in Yamato.

¹⁸¹⁶ The Auxiliary Numeral for deities is here used.

¹⁸¹⁷ Homuda-no-ma-waka no miko. Homuda has already been met with as the came of a place in Kahachi. Ma-waka signifies "truly young." The name might therefore be rendered "truly young king of Homuda."

¹⁸¹⁸ Takagi no iri-bime no mikoto. Motowori identifies this princess with the Takaki-hime of Sect. LXXVI, Note 21.

¹⁸¹⁹ I.e., "middle princess," she being the second of three sisters.

¹⁸²⁰ I.e., "younger princess," she being the youngest of the sisters.

¹⁸²¹ I-ho-ki-no-iri-biko no mikoto. See Sect. LXXVI, Note 12.

¹⁸²² I.e., probably "old woman of Shiritsuki." But it is not certain that Shiritsuki is the name of a place.

¹⁸²³ Take-inada no sukune. In the "Chronicles of Old Matters of Former Ages" the name is written Take-ina-dane, and it may therefore mean "brave-rice-seed."

¹⁸²⁴ Wohari no murazhi.

¹⁸²⁵ I.e., "great middle Prince of Nukata," the latter being the name of a place in Yamato. It is of uncertain signification.

¹⁸²⁶ I.e., "great mountain-warden." For the appropriateness of this name conf. Sect. CV.

¹⁸²⁷ The same name has appeared in Sect. LXIII, Note 13.

¹⁸²⁸ Ohohara no iratsume. Ohohara is the name of a place in Yamato It signifies "great moor."

¹⁸²⁹ Komuku no iratsume. This name is written 高目 and its reading as Komuku is somewhat hypothetical. It is the name of a place in Kahachi, and probably signifies "an overflowing pool of water."

¹⁸³⁰ Ki no Arata no iratsume. Ki is the province of that name, and Arata is a place in it. The latter name probably means "uncultivated fields."

¹⁸³¹ This name signifies "Great Wren," and is thus accounted for by the author of the "Chronicles": "On the day when the Emperor [this Prince became the Emperor Nin-toku] was born, an owl flew into the parturition-hall. Next morning early, the Heavenly Sovereign Homuda [i.e., the Emperor Ō-jin] sent for the Prime Minister, the Noble Takeuchi, and asked him whereof this might be a sign. The Prime Minister replied, saying: 'It is a good omen. Moreover yesterday, when thy servant's wife was delivered of a child, a wren flew into the parturition-house, likewise a strange thing.' Then the Heavenly Sovereign said: 'It is a portent from heaven that my child and thine should be born on the same day, and both be attended by a good omen. So let the names of the birds be taken,' and each used for the name of the other [i.e., the name of the owl for him into whose parturition-house the wren flew, and vice-versâ], as a covenant for the future.' So the wren's name was the Lady of Unu in Ki; ¹⁸³⁵ next the Lady of Minu ¹⁸³⁶ (five Deities). ¹⁸³⁷ Again he wedded the Princess Miya-nushi-ya-kaha-ye, ¹⁸³⁸ daughter of the Grandee Wani-no-Hifure, and begot august children: Uji-no-waki-iratsumo; ¹⁸³⁹ next his younger sister Yata-no-waki-iratsumo; ¹⁸⁴⁰ next Queen Medori. ¹⁸⁴¹ (Three Deities). Again he wedded Wo-nabe-no-iratsumo, ¹⁸⁴² younger sister of Yakaha-ye-hime, and begot an august child: Uji-no-iratsumo. ¹⁸⁴³ (one Deity). Again he wedded Okinaga-ma-waka-naka-tsu-hima," ¹⁸⁴⁴ daughter of King Kuhimata-naga-hiko, ¹⁸⁴⁵ and begot an august child: King Waka-nuke-futa-mata ¹⁸⁴⁶ (one Deity). Again he wedded the Princess of Itowi, ¹⁸⁴⁷ daughter of Shima-tari-ne, ¹⁸⁴⁸ ancestor of the Agricultural Chiefs of Sakurawi, ¹⁸⁴⁹ and begot an august child; His Augustness Hayabusa-wake ¹⁸⁵⁰ (one Deity). Again, he wedded Naga-hime of Idzumi in Himuka, ¹⁸⁵¹ and begot august children: King Oho-haye, ¹⁸⁵² next King Wo-haye; ¹⁸⁵³ next Hata-bi-no-waki-iratsumo ¹⁸⁵⁴ (three Deities). Again he wedded Princess Ka-guro, ¹⁸⁵⁵ and begot august children: Kaha-rada-no-iratsumo; ¹⁸⁵⁶ next, Tama-no-iratsumo, ¹⁸⁵⁷ next, Osaka-no-ohobestowed on the Heir Apparent, who was called Great-Wren Prince, and the owl's name was give Ito the Prime Minister's child. who was called the Noble Owl."

¹⁸³² This name is obscure.

¹⁸³³ Abe no iratsumo. Abe is the name of several places in different provinces, and is of obscure derivation and import.

¹⁸³⁴ Ahaji no Mikara no iratsumo. The text properly has Ayuchi, but Motowori emends this to Ahaji on the authority of the "Chronicles." Mihara is the name of a district in the island of Ahaji, and probably signifies "three moors."

¹⁸³⁵ Ki no Unu no iratsumo. Ki is the province of that name, and Unu a place in it. The latter name is of uncertain import.

¹⁸³⁶ Minu no iratsumo. Minu (Mino) is the province of that name.

¹⁸³⁷ "Five" must here be a mistake for "four."

¹⁸³⁸ For this name and the next see Sect. CVI, Notes 5 and 4.

¹⁸³⁹ I.e., "the young lord of Uji." Uji is the name of a district in Yamashiro, famous in classical and modern times for its tea. The etymology is obscure.

¹⁸⁴⁰ I.e., "the young lady of Yata." Yata is the name of a place in Yamato. The etymology is obscure.

¹⁸⁴¹ Medori no miko. Medori signifies "hen-bird:" but the reason for the application of so strange a name to this princess, whose fortunes are related at some length in Sect. CXXVI and CXXVII, does not appear. A similar remark applies to the next name.

¹⁸⁴² I.e., probably "the lady of the little kettle."

¹⁸⁴³ I.e., "the young lady of Uji."

¹⁸⁴⁴ I.e., "the truly young middle princess of Okinaga."

¹⁸⁴⁵ See Sect. XCII, Note 27.

¹⁸⁴⁶ Waka-muke-futa-mata no miko. This name is obscure.

¹⁸⁴⁷ Itowi-hime. Itowi is the name of a place in Yamato, and is of uncertain origin.

¹⁸⁴⁸ Shima is probably the name of a place, while tari and ne are the frequently recurring Honorifics rendered respectively "perfect" and "lord" in former parts of this translation.

¹⁸⁴⁹ Sakurawi no ta-be no murazhi. Ta-be, rendered "agricultural," is literally "rice-field tribe." Sakurawi ("cherry well") is the name of a place in Kahachi.

¹⁸⁵⁰ I.e., falcon-lord.

¹⁸⁵¹ Himuka no Idzumi no Naga-hime. Himuka is the name of a province, and Idzumi that of a district now comprised within the limits of Satsuma. Nagahime, literally "long princess," probably signifies "elder princess."

¹⁸⁵² Oho-haye no miko. Signification obscure.

¹⁸⁵³ Wo-haye no miko. Signification obscure. The antithesis of the Adjectives oho and wo ("great" and "small") shows however that the names partly served to distinguish the elder from the younger brother.

¹⁸⁵⁴ Waki-iratsumo is "younger lady." Hata-bi is incomprehensible.

¹⁸⁵⁵ See Sect. LXXVI, Note 28.

¹⁸⁵⁶ I.e., probably "the lady of Kaharada." The latter name (literally "rice-field on the border of a river") is often met with.

naka-tsu-hime; ¹⁸⁵⁸ next, Toho-hi-no-iratsume; ¹⁸⁵⁹ next, King Kataji ¹⁸⁶⁰ (five Deities). Again, he wedded Nu-iro-me of Kadzuraki, ¹⁸⁶¹ and begot an august [244] child: King Iza-no-ma-waka, ¹⁸⁶² (one Deity). The august children of this Heavenly Sovereign [numbered] altogether twenty-six (eleven Kings and fifteen Queens). Of these His Augustness Oho-sazaki [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire.

¹⁸⁵⁷ I.e., "the jewel lady."

¹⁸⁵⁸ I.e., "the great middle lady of Osaka," the latter being the name of a place in Yamato (see Sect. XLVIII, Note 1).

¹⁸⁵⁹ Motowori identifies this name with that Koto-fushi no iratsume in Sect. CXVII, q.v., and thinks that both this and the preceding name have only crept into this Section by mistake.

¹⁸⁶⁰ Kataji no miko, Signification obscure,

¹⁸⁶¹ Kadzuraki no Nu-iro-me. All the elements of this name have already been met with several times.

¹⁸⁶² This child has already appeared early in this Section, and the name is here doubtless only repeated through some copyist's error.

SECTION CV.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART II.—HE DIVIDES THE INHERITANCE BETWEEN HIS THREE SONS)

Hereupon the Heavenly Sovereign asked His Augustness Oho-yama-mori and His Augustness Oho-sazaki, saying: "Which think ye the dearer, an elder child or a younger child?" (The reason why the Heavenly Sovereign propounded this question was because it was his intention ¹⁸⁶³ to make Uji-no-waki-iratsuko rule the Empire). Then His Augustness Oho-yama-mori said: "The elder child is the dearer." Next His Augustness Oho-sazaki, knowing the august feeling which made the Heavenly Sovereign deign to ask [the question], said: "The elder child, having already become a man, gives no trouble; but the younger child, not being yet a man, is the dearer." Then the Heavenly Sovereign said: "My lord Sazaki's words agree with my thoughts," and forthwith ordained the division [of the inheritance] thus: His Augustness Oho-yama-mori to administer the government of the mountains and the sea, ¹⁸⁶⁴ His Augustness Oho-sazaki to take and deign to report on the government of the realm, ¹⁸⁶⁵ and Uji-no waki-iratsuko to rule the succession of Heaven's sun. ¹⁸⁶⁶ So His Augustness Oho-sazaki was not disobedient to the Heavenly Sovereign's commands. ¹⁸⁶⁷

¹⁸⁶³ Literally, "heart."

¹⁸⁶⁴ I.e., Motowori thinks, to have control over the guilds of foresters and fishermen.

¹⁸⁶⁵ I.e., to act as regent or minister.

¹⁸⁶⁶ I.e., to inherit the empire.—It will be remembered that the Japanese Emperors claim to descend from the Sun-Goddess.

¹⁸⁶⁷ This statement refers proleptically to the contrary course which was taken by the elder Oho-yama-mori.

SECTION CVI.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART III.—HE WOOES PRINCESS MIYA-NUSHI-YA-KAHA-YE)

One day ¹⁸⁶⁸ the Heavenly Sovereign, when he had crossed over into the land of Afumi, augustly stood on the moor of Uji, gazed on the moor of Kadzu, and sang, saying:

"As I look on the Moor of Kadzu in Chiba. both the hundred thousand-fold abundant house-places are visible, and the land's acme is visible." ¹⁸⁶⁹

So when he reached the village of Kohara, ¹⁸⁷⁰ a beautiful maiden met him at a fork in the road, Then the Heavenly Sovereign asked the maiden, saying: "Whose child art thou?" She replied, saying: "I am the daughter of the Grandee Wani-no-Hifure, ¹⁸⁷¹ and my name is Princess Miya-nushi-ya-kaha-ye." ¹⁸⁷² The Heavenly Sovereign forthwith said to the maiden: "When I return on my progress to-morrow, I will enter into thy house." So Princess Ya-kaha-ye told her father all that [had happened]. Thereupon her father replied, saying: "Ah! it was the Heavenly Sovereign! [His commands are] to be respected. My child, respectfully serve him!"—and so saying he grandly decorated the house, and awaited [the Heavenly Sovereign's return], whereupon he came in on the next day. ¹⁸⁷³ So when [the father] served [the Heavenly Sovereign] a great august feast, he made his daughter Her Augustness ¹⁸⁷⁴ Princess Ya-kaha take the great august liquor-cup and present it. Thereupon, while taking the great liquor-cup, the Heavenly Sovereign augustly sang, saying:

"Oh this crab! whence this crab? [It is] a crab from far-distant Tsunuga. Whither reaches its sideward motion? [It has] come towards Ichiji-shima and Mi-shima. It must be because, plunging and breathless like the grebe, I went without stopping along the up and down road by the wavelets, that the maiden I met on the Kohata road has a back oh! like a small shield, a row of teeth like acorns. Oh! the earth of the Wani pass at Ichihwi! Owing to the skin of the first earth being ruddy, to the last earth being of a reddish black, she, without exposing to the actual sun that makes one bend one's head the middle earth like three chestnuts, draws thickly down her drawn eye-brows;—the ¹⁸⁶⁸ Literally, "one time."

¹⁸⁶⁹ According to Moribe, whose interpretation has been followed throughout, this Song signifies: "As I gaze across from Uji to the Moor of Toba, I see the numerous and prosperous homesteads of the people, I see the most fertile portion of the country."—On this view Chiba is identified with Toba, the name of a district; and the word ho, rendered "acme," is taken to mean the best, highest, most showy part of anything. For Motowori's opinion, which is that of the older commentators as well, that chi-ba is a Pillow-Word, there is much to be said, and if we followed it, we should have to render the first two lines thus: "As I look on the thousand-leafed pueraria-moor," etc. (kadzu signifying "pueraria.") Motowori's explanation of momo-chi-dare (here rendered by "hundred thousand-fold abundant") as referring to the soot of the peasant's roofs, and of ho as signifying "a plain surrounded by mountains" seems much less good than Moribe's interpretation of those difficult expressions.

¹⁸⁷⁰ In the district of Uji in the province of Yamashiro. The characters with which the name is written signify "tree-flag."

¹⁸⁷¹ Wani no Hifure no omi. For Wani no omi see Sect. LXII, Note 11. The meaning of Hifure is obscure.

¹⁸⁷² Miya-nushi ya-kata-hime. Miya-nushi is "priestess," or more literally "temple-guardian." For the rest of the name see Sect. XXVI, Note 14, though the personages are of course meant to be different.

¹⁸⁷³ I.e., that day having passed by, the Emperor came on the next day according to his promise.

¹⁸⁷⁴ Motowori supposes with apparent reason that the character 命, p. 307 "Augustness," has only crept into the text through the attraction of the following character 令, "made," which it resembles in appearance.

women I met, the child I saw and wanted in this way, the child I saw and wanted in that way, oh! she is opposite to me at the height of the feast! oh! she is at my side!" ¹⁸⁷⁵

Ita auguste coivit [cum illâ], et procreavit filium Uji-no-waki-iratsuko.

¹⁸⁷⁵ It must be understood that in this Song the Imperial singer commences by referring to what doubtless formed part of the feast,—a crab,—and thence passes on by an imperceptible transition to allude to his own adventure with the maiden. As the crab when alive walked sideways, so was the Emperor zigzagging up and down the road that lines the shore of Lake Biwa, pursuing his breathless course like that of the busy grebe that perpetually plunges into the water, when the maiden met him near Kohata. Beautiful indeed was she: her back straight as a shield, her teeth like a row of acorns, and the artificial eye-brows painted a dark colour on her forehead drawn low down in a perfect crescent-shape. She had been careful in selecting the clay to make the paint, rejecting the upper layer of earth, for that was of too bright a red, rejecting likewise the lower layer, for that was too dark, but taking the middle, which was of the correct blue tint, and drying it, not in the fierce, but in a mildly tempered, sun-light. And now this maiden, for whom his heart had been panting and turning this way and that ever since the previous day, is actually seated opposite to him, nay! at his very side, and he is feasting in her sweet company.—Tsunuga is the name of a place in the province of Echizen. "Far-distant" is an imperfect attempt at rendering the force of the Pillow-Word momo-dzutafu, which implies that the traveller must pass through a hundred other places before reaching his destination. "Whither reaches its sideward motion?" signifies "whither is it going with its sideward motion?" Ichiji-shima and Mishima are places of which nothing is known, so that the allusion to them is obscure. At this point Motowori's interpretation diverges from that of Moribe, which has been followed throughout. Sasanami, here rendered "wavelets," is taken by him, as by the older commentators, as the name of a place, and the description of the maiden's teeth is misunderstood to signify that she had a beak filled with a row of teeth like the water-caltrop! Motowori also would here divide the Song in two, a proceeding for which there is not sufficient warrant. On other minor points, too, his decisions do not seem so happy as Moribe's. The view of both commentators will be found at length in Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXXII, pp. 33.51, and in Moribe's "Idzu no Kato-Waki," in loco. Three chestnuts" (mitsu-guri no) is a common Pillow-Word for naka, "middle," founded on the fact, real or supposed, that one burr always contains three nuts, whereof one of course is in the middle, between the other two.

SECTION CVII.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART IV.—HE GRANTS PRINCESS KAMINAGA TO HIS SON OHO-SAZAKI)

The Heavenly Sovereign, hearing of the beauty of Princess Kaminaga, ¹⁸⁷⁶ daughter of the Duke of Muragata ¹⁸⁷⁷ in the land of Himuka, and thinking to employ her ¹⁸⁷⁸ sent down for her, ¹⁸⁷⁹ whereupon the Heir Apparent ¹⁸⁸⁰ His Augustness Oho-sazaki, having seen the maiden land at the port of Naniha, and being charmed with the grace of her appearance, forthwith directed the Prince Minister the Noble Taka-uchi, to intercede for him in the august presence of the Heavenly Sovereign, and make [the latter] grant to him Princess Kami-naga, whom he had sent down for. Then on the Prime Minister the Noble Take-uchi requesting the great commands, ¹⁸⁸¹ the Heavenly Sovereign forthwith granted Princess Kami-naga to his august child. The way he granted her was this:—the Heavenly Sovereign, on a day when he partook of a copious feast, ¹⁸⁸² gave Princess Kami-naga the great august liquor oak-[leaf ¹⁸⁸³] to present to the Heir Apparent. Then he augustly sang, saying:

"Come on, children! oh! the fragrant flowering orange-tree on my way as I go to pluck the wild garlic,—to pluck the garlic,—has its uppermost branches withered by birds perching on them, and its lowest branches withered through people plucking from them. But the budding fruit on the middle branch, like three chestnuts,—the ruddy maiden, oh! if thou lead her off with thee, it will be good, oh!" ¹⁸⁸⁴

Again he augustly sang, saying:

"Driving the dyke-piles into Lake Yosami p. 309 where the water collects, my heart (ignorant of the pricking of the stumps of the water-caltrop, ignorant of the creeping of ¹⁸⁷⁶ Kami-naga-hime. The name signifies "the long-haired princess."

¹⁸⁷⁷ Murakata no kami. Murakata seems to signify "many towns."

¹⁸⁷⁸ i.e., wed her.

¹⁸⁷⁹ Literally, "summoned her up." The same phrase occurs immediately below.

¹⁸⁸⁰ 太子. Mabuchi thinks that 御子, "august child," should be substituted for the reading in the text. But Motowori insists that the title translated Heir Apparent was anciently borne by all the sons of an Emperor, and that consequently no emendation is called for.

¹⁸⁸¹ i.e., the Emperor's orders.

¹⁸⁸² The native term translated "copious feast" is toyo no akari, variously written with the characters 豊明, 豊樂, 宴樂, etc., etc. It literally signifies "copious brightness," in allusion to the ruddy glow which wine gives to the faces of the revellers, and henceforward perpetually recurs in this history. In later times it specifically denoted the festival of, the tasting of the first rice, but anciently its meaning was not thus limited. Motowori's note on the subject, in Vol. XXXII, pp. 57-59 of his Commentary, may be consulted with advantage.

¹⁸⁸³ i.e., an oak-leaf which was used as a cup to sip out of. Leaf-platters p. 310 for food have already been mentioned. Motowori says that the word kashika (properly the name of a deciduous oak, the Quercus dentata) was employed to denote any kind of leaf thus used.

¹⁸⁸⁴ The whole gist of this Song is contained in the last three lines. "The ruddy maiden, oh if thou lead her off with thee, it will be good,"—i.e. "thou and the maiden, will form a fitting couple." All that goes before is what is technically called a "Preface," though its bearing is so clear as to admit of translation, and even in English to form an appropriate introduction to the Song:—It is not the stinking garlic, but the fragrant orange that the singer has met by the way, and it is the choicest young fruit in the very middle of the tree that forms a suitable comparison for the lovely young girl.—With the favourite allusion to upper, middle, and lower the reader is already familiar, and the Pillow-Word "three chestnuts" was explained in the note on the preceding Song (Sect. CVI, Note 8).

the roots of the Brasenia peltata), being more and more laughable, is now indeed repentant." ¹⁸⁸⁵

Having thus sung, he bestowed [her on the Heir Apparent]. So after having been granted the maiden, the Heir Apparent sang, saying:

"Oh! the maiden of Kohada in the back of the road! though I heard of her like the thunder, we mutually intertwine [our arms] as pillows." ¹⁸⁸⁶

Again he sang saying":

"I think lovingly ah! of how the maiden of Kohada in the back of the road sleeps [with me] without disputing" ¹⁸⁸⁷

¹⁸⁸⁵ The gist of the Song is: "I knew not that thou, my son, hadst conceived a secret passion for the maiden; but I am now conscious of my own mistake, and my foolish old heart is ashamed of itself." With this explanation the elaborate comparison between the state of the monarch's mind and the condition of the peasant driving piles for the foundation of a dyke, and having his feet either lacerated by the stumps of the water-caltrop, or made slimy by brushing against the roots of the Brasenia peltata at the bottom of the water, becomes intelligible and appropriate.—The word kuri, rendered "roots," perplexed Motowori, who suggests that it may be but a second name of the Brasenia, appended to the first; but Moribe's suggestion that it is to be identified with korī, and taken in the signification of "roots" though not quite convincing, is at least more plausible. The text of this Song is corrupt in these "Records" and has to be corrected by a comparison with that of the "Chronicles." Moribe goes into an amusing ecstasy over the picture of ancient manners which it presents, and lauds the simplicity of days when a father and son could so peacefully woo the same maiden without mutual concealment or disastrous consequences!

¹⁸⁸⁶ The meaning of this Song is: "At first I heard of the maiden of Kohada in the furthest parts of Himuka as one hears the distant thunder; but now she is mine, and we sleep locked in each other's arms."—This Kohada in Himuka must not be confounded with the Kohata in Yamashiro mentioned in the preceding Section. The "back of the road" means the remotest portion (conf. Sect. LX, Note 20). The thunder must be understood to refer to a very faint and distant sound: the Prince had first heard of the maiden vaguely, but now she is his and has been his for some time; for this Song must be supposed to have been composed after the occasion of the feast with the story of which it is here connected.

¹⁸⁸⁷ The meaning of this Song is: "I love this maiden of Kohada in Himuka, who disputed not my desire and my father's grant, but willingly became my wife."—It is hard to render into English the force of the string of Particles wo shi zo mo in the penultimate line.

SECTION CVIII.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART V.—SONGS OF THE TERRITORIAL OWNERS OF YESHINU)

Again, the Territorial Owners of Yeshinu, ¹⁸⁸⁸ seeing the august sword which was girded on His Augustness Oho sazaki, sang, saying:

"Sharp is the beginning, freezing is the end of the sword girded on Oho-sazaki, Oho, sazaki, the solar august child of Homuda,—[it is] chilly, chilly like the trees beneath the trunks of the winter trees." ¹⁸⁸⁹

Again, having made a cross-mortar ¹⁸⁹⁰ at Kashifu ¹⁸⁹¹ in Yeshinu, and having in that cross-mortar distilled ¹⁸⁹² some great august liquor, they, when they presented the great august liquor [to the Heavenly Sovereign], sang as follows, drumming with their mouths:

"We have made a side-mortar at Kashinofu, and in the side-mortar we have distilled some great august liquor, which do thou sweetly partake of, oh our lord!" ¹⁸⁹³

This Song is one which it is the custom to chant down to the present day when, from time to time, the Territorial Owners present a great feast [to the Sovereign].

¹⁸⁸⁸ Yeshinu is the modern Yoshino, in the province of Yamato (see Sect. XLVI, Note 3). For the title of kudzu see Sect. XLVI, Note 13, where it also occurs in connection with Yeshinu.

¹⁸⁹⁰ Yoko-usu or yokusu (横臼). It is not plain what sort of mortar the author intended to designate by this term. Motowori supposes it to mean a broad flat mortar in contradistinction to a high and narrow one. Keichiū's view, which he quotes, to the effect that it was a mortar that had been carved out of the, block against the grain of the wood, seems an equally good guess, where all is guess-work.

¹⁸⁹¹ In the Song this same name is read Kashinofu; but the commentators tell us that the Genitive Particle no ("of") is simply inserted for the sake of rhythm, and it is not unlikely that they are right. The name seems to signify "[a place where] oak-trees grow."

¹⁸⁹² See Sect. XVIII, Note 16. The character 醸, rendered by "distil" or "brew," according to the view which one may take of the resulting liquor, would seem to be here used in the sense of "to pound."

¹⁸⁹³ In this simple Song the Territorial Owners of Yoshino beg the Monarch to deign to partake of the sake which they have made.

SECTION CIX.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART VI.—VARIOUS DEEDS)

In this august reign were graciously established the Fisher Tribe, ¹⁸⁹⁴ the Mountain Tribe, ¹⁸⁹⁵ the Mountain Warden Tribe, ¹⁸⁹⁶ and the Ise Tribe. ¹⁸⁹⁷ Again the Pool of Tsurugi was made. Again there came over [to Japan] some people from Shiragi. Therefore His Augustness the Noble Take-uchi, having taken them with him and set them to labour on pools and embankments, made the Pool of Kudara. ¹⁸⁹⁸

¹⁸⁹⁴ Ama-be (written 海部 and read Una-be in the Old Printed Edition and in the edition of 1687, and perhaps better rendered "Sea-Tribe.") The name of this guild or clan does not seem to have remained, like the two mentioned together with it, as a "gentile name."

¹⁸⁹⁵ Yama-be. Motowori thinks that this word has crept into the text erroneously through the influence of that next mentioned, as the functions of the tribes or guilds thus separately named were identical. The differentiation may have taken place after the terms had come to be used as "gentile names."

¹⁸⁹⁶ Yama-moribe.

¹⁸⁹⁷ Ise-be. Nothing is known of this tribe or guild.

¹⁸⁹⁸ Doubtless so named after the Korean labourers employed upon it,—Kudara and Shiragi, as different parts of the same peninsula, being confounded in thought.

SECTION CX.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART VIII.—TRIBUTE FROM KOREA)

Again King Shō-ko, ¹⁸⁹⁹ the Chieftain of the land of Kudara, sent as tribute by Achi-kishi ¹⁹⁰⁰ one stallion and one mare. (This Achi-kishi was the ancestor of the Achiki Scribes. ¹⁹⁰¹) Again he sent as tribute a cross-sword, ¹⁹⁰² and likewise a large mirror. Again he was graciously bidden ¹⁹⁰³ to send as tribute a wise man, if there were any such in the land of Kudara. Therefore receiving the [Imperial] commands, he sent as tribute a man named Wani-kishi, ¹⁹⁰⁴ and likewise by this man he sent as tribute the Confucian Analects ¹⁹⁰⁵ in ten volumes and the Thousand Character Essay ¹⁹⁰⁶ in one volume,—altogether eleven volumes. (This Wani-kishi was the ancestor of the Fumi Grandees.) ¹⁹⁰⁷ Again he sent as tribute two artisans,—a smith from Kara named Taku-so ¹⁹⁰⁸ and a weaver from Go ¹⁹⁰⁹ named Sai-so. ¹⁹¹⁰

¹⁸⁹⁹ 照古王, according to the Japanese kana spelling, Sen-ko.

¹⁹⁰⁰ 阿知吉師. Other forms of the name are Ajiki and Atogi, and all three are but attempts at transcribing phonetically into Japanese a Korean name, the proper characters for which are not given. 士吉 is not properly part of the name, but is simply an official title (帥 here stands for 士).

¹⁹⁰¹ Achiki no fumi-bito, Pumi-bito (abbreviated to Fubito) became a "gentile name."

¹⁹⁰² See Sect. XLV, Note 5.

¹⁹⁰³ Q.d., by the Japanese Emperor.

¹⁹⁰⁴ Here written phonetically 和邇吉師, but properly, 王仁吉士, i.e. "the Official Wang In." He is generally spoken of simply as Wani.

¹⁹⁰⁵ 論語. ("Lun Yu," or according to the Japanese pronunciation "Rongo.")

¹⁹⁰⁶ 千文字. ("Chien Tzu Wen," or according to the Japanese pronunciation "Sen ji-mun.") See the translator's remarks on this subject in the Introduction, p. xliii. The "Chronicles" more prudently mention only "various classics."

¹⁹⁰⁷ Fumi no obito. Fumi signifies "any written document," so that this "gentile name" is equivalent to our word "scribe."

¹⁹⁰⁸ 卓素. The transliteration of this, as of all other such names here occurring, is the Sinico-Japanese transliteration. Kara (Korea) is written 韓.

¹⁹⁰⁹ 吳 (Wu, Jap. Go), one of the states into which China was divided during the third century of our era. A draper's shop is still called go-fuku-ya, i.e., "Wu-garment-house" in memory of the introduction of wearing apparel from that country.

¹⁹¹⁰ 西紫.

SECTION CXI.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART VIII.—THE EMPEROR INTOXICATED)

Again there came over [to Japan] the ancestor of the Hada Rulers, ¹⁹¹¹ the ancestor of the Aya Suzerains, ¹⁹¹² and likewise a man who knew how to distil liquor, and whose name was Nim-pan, ¹⁹¹³ while another name for him was Susukori. ¹⁹¹⁴ So this [man] Susukori distilled some great august liquor, and presented it to the Heavenly Sovereign, who, excited with the great august liquor that had been presented to him augustly sang, saying:

"I have become intoxicated with the august liquor distilled by Susukori. I have become intoxicated with the soothing liquor, with the smiling liquor." ¹⁹¹⁵

On his walking out singing thus, he hit with his august staff a large stone in the middle of the Ohosaka ¹⁹¹⁶ road, upon which the stone ran away. So the proverb says: "Hard stones get out of a drunkard's way."

¹⁹¹¹ Hada na miyatsuko, 秦造, a "gentile name." Hada is the native Japanese word used as the equivalent of the Chinese name 秦, Ch'in. Its origin is uncertain.

¹⁹¹² Aya no ataha 漢直, a "gentile name." The use of Aya to represent the Chinese name 漢, Han, is as difficult to account for as is that of Hada mentioned in the preceding Note.

¹⁹¹³ 仁番. Another and more Japanese-like reading, Niho, is invented by Motowori; but the older editors read Nim-pan according to the usual Sinico-Japanese sound of the characters. The modern Korean reading would be In-pon.

¹⁹¹⁴ Written phonetically 須須許理.

¹⁹¹⁵ Thus translated, this Song is too clear to need any explanation. The lines, however, which are rendered by "with the soothing liquor, with the smiling liquor."—in Japanese koto nagu shi we-guzhi-ni,—are in reality extremely obscure, and Moribe understands them to signify, "Oh! p. 316 how difficult it is for me to speak! Oh! how ill at ease I am!" In order to do so he has, however, to change and add to the text; and the translator, though not sure of being in the right path, has preferred to follow Motowori, whose interpretation, without requiring any such extreme measures, yet gives a very plausible sense.

¹⁹¹⁶ See Sect. LXIV, Note 25.

SECTION CXII.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART IX.—TROUBLES WHICH FOLLOWED HIS DECEASE)

So after the decease of the Heavenly Sovereign, His Augustness Ohosazaki, in conformity with the Heavenly Sovereign's commands, ceded the Empire to Uji-no-waki-iratsuko. Thereupon His Augustness Ohoyama-mori, disobeying the Heavenly Sovereign's commands, and anxious in spite thereof to obtain the Empire, had the design to slay the Prince ¹⁹¹⁷ his younger brother, secretly raised an army, and prepared to attack him. Then His Augustness Oho-sazaki, hearing that his elder brother had prepared an army, forthwith despatched a messenger to apprise Uji-no-waki-iratsuko. So, startled at the news, [the latter] set troops in ambush by the river-bank, and likewise, after having drawn a fence of curtains and raised a tent on the top of the hill, placed there publicly on a throne ¹⁹¹⁸ one of his retainers to pretend that he was the King, ¹⁹¹⁹ the manner in which all the officials ¹⁹²⁰ reverentially went and came being just like that [usual] in the King's presence. And moreover, preparing for the time when the King his elder brother ¹⁹²¹ should cross the river, he arranged and decorated a boat and oars, and moreover ¹⁹²² ground [in a mortar] the root of the Kadzura japonica, and having taken the slime of its juice, rubbed therewith the grating ¹⁹²³ inside the boat, so as to make any who should tread on it fall down, and then himself ¹⁹²⁴ put on a cloth coat and trowsers, and having assumed the appearance of a common fellow, stood in the boat holding the oar. Hereupon, when the King his elder brother, having hid his troops in ambush and put on armour beneath his clothes, reached the river-bank and was about to get into the boat, he gazed at the grandly decorated place [on the hill], thought the King his younger brother was sitting on the throne, being altogether ignorant [of the fact] that he was standing in the boat holding the oar, and forthwith asked the fellow who was holding the oar, saying: "It has been reported to me that on this mountain there is a large and angry boar. I wish to take that boar. Shall I peradventure get that boar?" Then the fellow holding the oar replied, saying: "Thou canst not." Again he asked, saying: "For what reason?" [The boat-man] answered, saying: "He is not to be got, however often and in however many places he be chased. Wherefore I say that thou canst not [catch him either]." When they had crossed as far as the middle of the river, [Prince Uji-no-waki-iratsuko] caused the boat to be tilted over, and [his elder brother] to fall into the ¹⁹¹⁷ 皇子. This is the only passage in the work where this expression occurs. Uji-no-waki-iratsuko is the personage thus designated.

¹⁹¹⁸ The same expression has been in Sect. XXXI (near Note 16) rendered "couch." The characters in the original are 吳床 or 胡床.

¹⁹¹⁹ I.e., Uji-na-maki-iratsuko.

¹⁹²⁰ The Chinese phrase 百官, "the hundred officials," is here used.

¹⁹²¹ Q.d., his Augustness Oho-yama-mori.

¹⁹²² The text has the character 者, which, in combination with the preceding words "oars" gives the sense of "oarsman," "boatman." But Motowori reasonably suggests that it is an error for 亦, the grass hand forms of the two characters closely resembling each other, and 亦 making much better sense; for who would talk of "decorating an oarsman"?

¹⁹²³ A bamboo grating.

¹⁹²⁴ Literally "that king's son."

water.¹⁹²⁵ Then forthwith he rose to the surface, and floated down with the current. Forthwith, as he floated, he sang, saying:

"Whoever is swiftest among the boatmen of the Uji ferry will come to me."¹⁹²⁶

Thereupon the troops that had been hidden on the river-bank rose up simultaneously on this side and on that side, and fixing their arrows [in their bows], let him go floating down. So he sank on reaching Kawara Point.¹⁹²⁷ So on their searching with hooks¹⁹²⁸ the place where he had sunk, [the hooks] struck on the armour inside his clothes, and made a rattling sound.¹⁹²⁹ So the place was called by the name of Kawara Point. Then when they hooked up¹⁹³⁰ his bones, the younger King, sang saying:

"Catalpa bow, Evonymus standing by the ferry-bank of Uji! My heart had thought to cut [you], my heart had thought to take [you]; but at the base methought of the lord, at the extremity methought of the younger sister; grievously methought of this, sorrowfully methought of, that; and I came [back] without cutting it,—the Catalpa bow, the Evonymus."¹⁹³¹

¹⁹²⁵ It must be understood that Uji-no-waki-iratsuko and his men. having planned to act thus, were on their guard, and did not fall into the water as did Oho-yama-mori, who was taken unawares.

¹⁹²⁶ This is Motowori's view of the meaning of the Song, which he interprets as a request for help to some friendly boatman. Moribe adopts quite a different view, and thinks that the drowning prince is rather giving vent to sentiments of pride and defiance. He says (speaking in the Prince's name): "It is not that I have been capsized out of the boat into the river. but that I am swimming off after a pole which has fallen into the water. If there be any strong and willing fellows among my partizans, let them swim after me." It must be explained that the word rendered "boatmen" in the translation is literally "pole-takers" (or, according to Moribe's view, "to take a pole.") Motowori's interpretation seems to do less violence to the wording of the original, and Moribe's has not even the merit of accounting for the use of the Future komu where the Imperative kone would be what we should naturally expect.—Uji is preceded by the, in this context, untranslatable Pillow-Word chihayaburu (see "Dictionary of Pillow-Words," s.v.).

¹⁹²⁷ Kawara no saki. The author, in the next sentence, derives this name from the rattling sound made by the books as they struck on the armour. But there seems a great deal to be said in favour of Arawi Hakuseki's view that kawara is an old word itself signifying "armour."

¹⁹²⁸ The word kagi here used occurs elsewhere to denote the hooks employed for fastening doors, and in later times took the specific meaning of "key."

¹⁹²⁹ Literally, "sounded kawara."

¹⁹³⁰ The text has the characters 掛出. But Motowori says that 掛 stands for 搔, and that we must interpret the passage to mean that they scratched [about to find] and take out [his corpse].

¹⁹³¹ The signification of this Song is: "I came here meaning to kill thee as I might cut down and kill that Catalpa tree, that Evonymus, growing on the river-bank. But the thought of our father and of thy sister (or wife) touched me with pity, and I return without having drawn my bow at thee."—Uji is preceded by the untranslatable Pillow-Word chihayahito (see Dictionary of Pillow-Words" s.v.;—Motowori reads it chihayahito without the nigori).—The words adzusa-yumi ma-yumi, here respectively rendered "Catalpa bow" and "Evonymus," are difficult, and the doubt as to whether we should understand the prince to be speaking simply of the trees, or to intend likewise to allude to his bow which was made of the wood of one of those trees, is probably not to be settled, as the words in question have always oscillated between the two p. 320 meanings, and here evidently contain a double allusion. Motowori thinks that the first of the two forms only a sort of Pillow-Word for the second.—The word rendered "bank," in accordance with Moribe's suggestion, is literally "reach."—No special importance must be attached to the expressions "base" (or "main part") and "extremity," though they may doubtless be thought to allude to the father and sister, the recollection of whom softened the victorious younger brother's heart. The word iranakeku, rendered "grievously," is of not quite certain interpretation.—It must be understood that though, by overturning the boat, Uji-no-waki-iratsuko did constructively cause Oho-yama-mori's death, he did not actually shoot at and slay him when in the water, but followed down the river-side lamenting over what had happened.—This Song is singled out by Moribe for special praise.

So the bones of His Augustness Oho-yama-mori were buried on the Nara ¹⁹³² mountain.

¹⁹³² See Sect. LXXII, Note 23.

¹⁹³³ Tohotafumi (Tōtōmi). In the original Hijikata no kimi.

¹⁹³⁴ Heki na kimi. Of Heki nothing is known,

¹⁹³⁵ Harihara no kimi. In Tohotafumi. Harihara signifies "alder plantation."

SECTION CXIII.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART X.—PRINCES OHO-SAZAKI AND UJI-NO-WAKI-IRATSUKO CEDE THE EMPIRE TO EACH OTHER)

Thereupon while the two Deities ¹⁹³⁶ His Augustness Oho-sazaki and Uji-no-waki-iratsuko were, each of them, ceding the Empire to the other, ¹⁹³⁷ a fisherman ¹⁹³⁸ came with a great feast as tribute. ¹⁹³⁹ So they each resigned it to the other. So the elder brother refused it, and caused it to be offered to the younger brother, and the younger brother refused it, and caused it to be offered to the elder brother, during which mutual cedings many days elapsed. As such mutual ceding took place not [only] once or twice, the fisherman wept from the fatigue of going backwards and forwards. So the proverb says:

"Ah! the fisherman weeps on account of his own things." ¹⁹⁴⁰ Meanwhile Uji-no-waki-iratsuko died early. ¹⁹⁴¹ So His Augustness Oho-sazaki did rule the Empire.

¹⁹³⁶ It is not actually the word kami, "deity," that is here used in the original, but hashira, which is the Auxiliary Numeral for Deities.

¹⁹³⁷ Neither being willing to accept the Imperial dignity.

¹⁹³⁸ Or, "some fishermen," and similarly in the Plural throughout.

¹⁹³⁹ I.e., came to present fish to His Majesty.

¹⁹⁴⁰ Motowori is probably right in saying that the point of this proverb lies in the consideration that, whereas people in general weep for that which they have not, this fisherman wept on account of the trouble which was caused to him by the fish which he had.

¹⁹⁴¹ Or, "died first," The use in this place of the character 崩, properly confined to the meaning of the "death of an Emperor," is remarkable. See Motowori's observations on the point in Vol. XXXIII, pp. 78-80.

SECTION CXIV.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART XI.—AMA-NO-HI-BOKO CROSSES OVER TO JAPAN)

Moreover of old there had been [a man] called by the name of Ama-no-hi-boko, ¹⁹⁴² child of the ruler of the land of Shiragi. This person crossed over here [to Japan]. The reason of his crossing over here was [this]: In the land of Shiragi there was a certain lagoon, ¹⁹⁴³ called by the name of the Agu Lagoon. ¹⁹⁴⁴ On the bank of this lagoon ¹⁹⁴⁵ a certain poor girl was [taking her] midday sleep. Tunc solis radii, coelesti arcui similes, in privatas partes impegerunt. Again there was a certain poor man, who, thinking this occurrence ¹⁹⁴⁶ strange, constantly watched the woman's behaviour. So the woman, having conceived from the time of that midday sleep, gave birth to a red jewel. Then the poor man who had watched her begged [to be allowed] to take the jewel, and kept it constantly wrapped up by his side. ¹⁹⁴⁷ This person, having planted a rice-field in a valley, ¹⁹⁴⁸ had loaded a cow ¹⁹⁴⁹ with food for the labourers, and was getting into the middle of the valley, when he met the ruler's son, Ama-no-hi-boko, who thereupon asked him, saying: "Why enterest thou the valley with a load of food upon a cow? Thou wilt surely kill this cow and eat her." Forthwith he seized the man and was about to put him into prison, when the man replied, saying: "I was not going to kill the cow. I was simply taking food to the people in the fields." But still [the ruler's child] would not let him go. Then he undid the jewel [which hung] at his side, and [therewith] bribed [the ruler's child]. So [the latter] let the poor man go, brought the jewel [home], and placed it beside his couch. Forthwith it was trans-formed into a beautiful maiden, whom he straightway wedded, and made his chief wife. Then the maiden perpetually prepared all sorts of dainties with which she constantly fed her husband. So the ruler's child [grew] proud in his heart, and reviled his wife. But the woman said: "I am not a woman who ought to be the wife of such as thou. I will go to the land of my ancestors;"—and forthwith she secretly embarked in a boat, and fled away across here [to Japan], and landed ¹⁹⁵⁰ at Naniha. ¹⁹⁵¹ (This is the deity called Princess Akaru, ¹⁹⁵² who dwells in the shrine of Hime-goso ¹⁹⁵³ at Naniha.) Thereupon Ame-no-hi-boko, hearing of his wife's ¹⁹⁴⁴ Agu-numa. The meaning of this name is unknown.

¹⁹⁴³ Apparently nothing more is meant than that there was "a lagoon;" but still the one (一) in this context is curious, and Motowori retains it as hito-tsu noin the Japanese reading. "A certain" seems best to render its force in English, as again in the following sentences, where Motowori interprets it by the character 或. It is of strangely frequent recurrence in the opening sentences of this Section, which are altogether peculiar in style.

¹⁹⁴⁵ The Old Printed Edition has the word "mud" instead of "lagoon."

¹⁹⁴⁶ Literally, "this appearance."

¹⁹⁴⁷ Literally, "attached to his loins."

¹⁹⁴⁸ The words rendered "in a valley" are in the text 山谷之間, of which the commentators find it difficult to make proper Japanese. The translator has followed them in neglecting the character 山, "mountain."

¹⁹⁴⁹ Or bull, or bullock; for Japanese does not distinguish Genders.

¹⁹⁵⁰ Literally, "stopped."

¹⁹⁵¹ See Sect. XLIV, Note 26.

¹⁹⁵² Akaru-hime, i.e., "Brilliant Princess."

¹⁹⁵³ The signification of this name is obscure. Motowori identifies the place with the modern Kodzu (高津).

flight, forthwith pursued her across hither, and was about to arrive at Naniha, when the Deity of the passage ¹⁹⁵⁴ prevented his entrance. So he went back again, and landed in the country of Tajima. ¹⁹⁵⁵

¹⁹⁵⁴ I.e., the water-god of the sea near Naniha.

¹⁹⁵⁵ See Sect. LXXIV, Note 1.

SECTION CXV.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART XII.— DESCENDANTS OF AMA-NO-HI-BOKO, AND TREASURES BROUGHT BY HIM.)

Forthwith staying in that country, he wedded Saki-tsu-mi, ¹⁹⁵⁶ daughter of Tajima-no-matawo, ¹⁹⁵⁷ and begot a child: Tajima-morosuku. ¹⁹⁵⁸ The latter's child was Tajima-hi-ne. ¹⁹⁵⁹ The latter's child was Tajima-hinaraki. ¹⁹⁶⁰ The latter's children were Tajima-mori, ¹⁹⁶¹ next Tajima-hitaka, ¹⁹⁶² next Kiyo-hiko ¹⁹⁶³ (three Deities). ¹⁹⁶⁴ This Kiyo-hiko wedded Tagima-no-mehi, ¹⁹⁶⁵ and begot children: Suga-no-morowo, ¹⁹⁶⁶ next his younger sister Suga-kama-yura-domi. ¹⁹⁶⁷ So the above mentioned Tajima-hitaka wedded his niece Yura-domi, and begot a child: Her Augustness Princess Takanuka of Kadzuraki. ¹⁹⁶⁸ (This was the august parent ¹⁹⁶⁹ of Her Augustness Princess Okinaga-tarashi.) So the things which Ama-no-hi-boko brought over here, and which were called the "precious treasures," ¹⁹⁷⁰ were: two strings of pearls: ¹⁹⁷¹ likewise a wave-shaking scarf, a wave-cutting scarf, a wind-shaking scarf, and a wind-cutting scarf; ¹⁹⁷² likewise a mirror of the offing and a mirror of the shore, ¹⁹⁷³—eight articles in all. (These are the Eight Great Deities of Idzushi.) ¹⁹⁷⁴

¹⁹⁵⁶ This name may mean "lucky ears," or "possessor of luck;" but it is obscure, and is moreover in the "Chronicles" (where it is given as the name, not of the daughter, but of the father) read Mahe-tsu-mi,—a reading which, will not bear either of these interpretations.

¹⁹⁵⁷ Matawo seems to signify "complete (i.e., healthy or vigorous) male." Observe that the word Tajima enters into the designations of most of his descendants.

¹⁹⁵⁸ In the "Chronicles" Morosuke, and elsewhere Morosugi. The etymology of these names is obscure except that of the last-mentioned, which signifies "many cryptomerias."

¹⁹⁵⁹ Hi-ne may perhaps signify "wondrous lord."

¹⁹⁶⁰ The meaning of this name is obscure, but that of Hina-rashi-hime in Sect. XXVI (Note 19) may be compared.

¹⁹⁶¹ See Sect. LXXIV, Note 1.

¹⁹⁶² Hi-taka may signify either "sun-height" or "wondrous height."

¹⁹⁶³ This name signifies "pure prince."

¹⁹⁶⁴ As usual, it is not the actual word Deity that is used, but the Auxiliary Numeral for Deities.

¹⁹⁶⁵ Tagima is the name of a place, not to be confounded with the province of Tajima. The signification of mehi is quite obscure.

¹⁹⁶⁶ Suga may either be the name of place in Tajima, as proposed by Motowori, or identical with the Suga of Sect. XIX. The meaning of Morowo is obscure.

¹⁹⁶⁷ The signification of this name is obscure. But Suga, Kama, and Yura are apparently the names of places.

¹⁹⁶⁸ Kadzuraki no Taka-nuka-hime. Kadzuraki is the name of a department, and Takanuka that of a place in that department, in the province of Yamato.

¹⁹⁶⁹ Literally, "ancestress." But see Sect. XXII, Note 4. It will be remembered that Okinaga-tarashi-hime was the Empress Jin-go.

¹⁹⁷⁰ Literally, "treasures of jewels."

¹⁹⁷¹ Or, "beads."

¹⁹⁷² i.e., a scarf to raise the waves and a scarf to still the waves, a scarf to raise the wind and a scarf to still the wind. Conf. the magic scarfs mentioned near the beginning of Sect. XXIII, by waving which the Deity Master-of-the-Great-Land (Oho-kuni-nushi) kept off the snakes, the wasps and the centipedes.

¹⁹⁷³ This seems to be the signification of the original terms oki tsu kagami and hi tsu kagami, but we are not hereby helped to a very clear understanding of the nature of the articles which the author meant to describe. The parallel passage of the "Chronicles" tells us of a "sun, mirror." Indeed it enumerates the "eight precious treasures" in a manner that diverges a great deal from the account given in these "Records."

¹⁹⁷⁴ Or, the "Eight-fold Great Deity." As has already frequently been remarked, the distinction which we so rigorously draw between Singular and Plural does not occupy the Japanese mind, and "eight" and "eight-fold" are taken to mean much the same thing. In the following sentence we find these eight deities (or this eightfold deity) spoken of in such a manner as to necessitate the use of the Singular Number in the translation. Motowori supposes that they (or he) took the form of a young man (as in several other legends) to become the father of the Goddess mentioned in the text. . . . Idzushi seems to signify "wonderful stone."

SECTION CXVI.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART XIII.—THE YOUTH-OF-THE-GLOW-ON-THE-AUTUMN-MOUNTAINS AND THE YOUTH-OF-THE-HAZE-ON-THE-SPRING-MOUNTAINS)

So this Deity had a daughter whose name was the Deity Maiden-of-Idzushi.¹⁹⁷⁵ So eighty Deities wished to obtain this Maiden-of-Idzushi in marriage, but none of them could do so.¹⁹⁷⁶ Hereupon there were two Deities, brothers, of whom the elder was called the Youth-of-the-Glow-on-the-Autumn-Mountains,¹⁹⁷⁷ and the younger was named the Youth-of-the-Haze-on-the-Spring-Mountains.¹⁹⁷⁸ So the elder brother said to the younger brother: "Though I beg for¹⁹⁷⁹ the Maiden of Idzushi, I cannot obtain her in marriage. Wilt thou [be able] to obtain her?" He answered, saying: "I will easily obtain her." Then the elder brother said: "If thou shalt obtain this maiden, I will take off my upper and lower garments, and distil liquor in a jar of my own height,¹⁹⁸⁰ and prepare all the things of the mountains and of the rivers¹⁹⁸¹ [and give them to thee] in payment of the wager." Then the younger brother told his mother everything that the elder brother had said. Forthwith the mother, having taken wistaria-fibre, wove and sewed in the space of a single night an upper garment and trowsers, and also socks and boots, and likewise made a bow and arrows, and clothed him in this upper garment, trowsers, etc., made him take the bow and arrows, and sent him to the maiden's house, where both his apparel and the bow and arrows all turned into wistaria-blossoms. Thereupon the Youth-of-the-Haze-on-the-Spring-Mountains hung up the bow and arrows in the maiden's privy. Then, when the Maiden-of-Idzushi, thinking the blossoms strange, brought them [home, the Youth-of-the-Haze-on-the-Spring-Mountains] followed behind the maiden into the house, and forthwith wedded her. So she gave birth to a child.¹⁹⁸² Then he spoke to his elder brother, saying: "I have obtained the Mayden-of-Idzushi." Thereupon the elder brother, vexed that the younger brother should have wedded her, did not pay the things he had wagered. Then when [the younger brother]

¹⁹⁷⁵ Idzushi-wotome no kami.

¹⁹⁷⁶ Literally "eighty Deities wished to obtain this Maiden of Idzushi, but none could wed (her)." But the sense is that given in the translation.

¹⁹⁷⁷ Ahi yama no shita-bi-wotoko. The explanation of the name is that given by Motowori (following Mabuchi), who sees in it a reference to the ruddy brilliance of the leaves, which is so marked a feature of the Japanese woods in autumn. The Chinese characters used have, indeed, the signification of the lower ice of the autumn mountains; but "lower ice" may well be simply phonetic in this case.

¹⁹⁷⁸ Haru-yamu no kasumi-wotoko.

¹⁹⁷⁹ In Japanese kohedomo, written with the characters 雖乞. Perhaps Motowori is right in supposing this Verb to have been originally identical with kofuru, "to love" (戀) whose corresponding form is kofuredomo. If so, the author may have meant to make his hero say, "though I love the maiden, etc." But it is better to be guided by the characters, and to suppose that he referred to the request made to her mother to grant her to him.

¹⁹⁸⁰ Literally, "compute the height of my person and distil liquor in a jar."

¹⁹⁸¹ i.e., all the valuable produce of the chase and of the fisheries, such as are perpetually mentioned in the Shinto "Rituals" as being presented to the gods, Thus in the "Service of the Goddess of Food" (see Mr. Satow's translation in Vol. VII, Pt. IV, p. 414 of these "Transactions,") we read that the worshipper offered: "as to things which dwell in the mountains—things soft of hair and things rough of hair; as to things which grow in the great-field-plain sweet herbs and bitter herbs; as to things which dwell in the blue-sea-plain—things wide of fin and things narrow of fin, down to weeds of the offing and weeds of the shore."

¹⁹⁸² Literally, "one child."

complained to his mother, his august parent replied, saying: "During my august life the Deities indeed are to be well imitated; moreover it must be because he imitates mortal men ¹⁹⁸³ that he does not pay those things." Forthwith, in her anger with her elder child, she took a jointed bamboo ¹⁹⁸⁴ from an island in the River Idzushi, and made a coarse basket with eight holes, ¹⁹⁸⁵ and took stones from the river, and mixing them with brine, wrapped them in the leaves of the bamboo ¹⁹⁸⁶ and caused this curse to be spoken: ¹⁹⁸⁷ "Like unto the becoming green of these bamboo-leaves, [do thou] become green and wither! Again, like unto the flowing and ebbing of this brine ¹⁹⁸⁸ [do thou] flow and ebb! Again, like unto the sinking of these stones, [do thou] sink and be prostrate! "Having caused this curse to be spoken, she placed [the basket] over the smoke. ¹⁹⁸⁹ Therefore the elder brother dried up, withered, sickened, and lay prostrate ¹⁹⁹⁰ for the space of eight years. So on the elder brother entreating his august parent with lamentations and fears, she forthwith caused the curse to be reversed. ¹⁹⁹¹ Thereupon his body became sound ¹⁹⁹² as it had been before. (This is the origin of the term "a divine wager payment.") ¹⁹⁹³

¹⁹⁸³ The Japanese original of the words here unavoidably rendered by "mortal men" in order to mark the antithesis to the word "Deities, has been more literally translated by "living people" in an earlier passage of the work (see Sect. IX, Note 17). The signification of the entire sentence is: "During my lifetime, thy brother should be careful to imitate the upright conduct of the gods. For if, instead of doing so, he be dishonest and untruthful as are the sons of men, it will be at his own peril."

¹⁹⁸⁴ Or, according to the more usual reading, "a one-jointed bamboo;" but in either case the meaning is obscure. Motowori, who adopts the reading that has been followed in the translation, suggests that the expression may simply be a periphrasis for the bamboo in general.

¹⁹⁸⁵ 八目荒籠. Motowori remarks that the word "eight" in this place (where, to indicate a considerable number we should rather expect "eighty") is curious, and he surmises that 八 may be an error for 大, "large." The word "coarse" itself is sufficient to show that the apertures left in the plaiting of the basket were large.

¹⁹⁸⁶ Scil. of which the basket was woven.

¹⁹⁸⁷ Scil. by her younger son.

¹⁹⁸⁸ In this case, as Motowori remarks, it is the sea-water that is intended to be spoken of, whereas the allusion in the previous sentence is to hard salt. But the Japanese language uses the same word for both, and the same Chinese character is here also used in both contexts. For this curse conf. Sect. XL (Note 18 et. seq.) and Sect. XLI.

¹⁹⁸⁹ Scil. of the furnace (kitchen) in the younger brother's house, as Motowori suggests.

¹⁹⁹¹ Such seems to be the meaning of the obscure original sono tokohi-do wo kahesashimeki (令返其詛戸), Motowori would understand it in a rather more specialized sense to signify that "she caused the implement of the curse (i.e., the basket) to be taken away,"

¹⁹⁹² Literally, "was pacified."

¹⁹⁹³ Or, if we take 言 in the text as equivalent to 事, "this is the origin of "divine water-payments."

SECTION CXVII.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART XVI.— GENEALOGIES)

Again this Heavenly Sovereign Homuda's ¹⁹⁹⁴ august child King Wake-nuke-futa-mata wedded his mother's younger sister Momo-shiki-iro-be, ¹⁹⁹⁵ another name for whom was Her Augustness Oto-hime-ma-wake-hime, ¹⁹⁹⁶ and begot children: Oho-iratsuko, ¹⁹⁹⁷ another name for whom was King Ohohodo; ¹⁹⁹⁸ next her Augustness Osaka-no-oho-naka-tsu-hime; ¹⁹⁹⁹ next Tawi-no-naka-tsu-hime; ²⁰⁰⁰ next Tamiya-no-naka-tsu-hime; ²⁰⁰¹ next Fujihara-no-koto-fushi-no-ira-tsume; ²⁰⁰² next Queen Torime; ²⁰⁰³ next King Sane. ²⁰⁰⁴ (Seven Kings (and Queens). ²⁰⁰⁵) So King Oho-hodo (was the ancestor of the Dukes of Mikuni, ²⁰⁰⁶ the Dukes of Hata, ²⁰⁰⁷ the Dukes of Okinaga, ²⁰⁰⁸ the Dukes of Sakahito of Sakata, ²⁰⁰⁹ the Dukes of Yamaji, ²⁰¹⁰ the Dukes of Meta in Tsukushi, ²⁰¹¹ and the Dukes of Fuse.) ²⁰¹² Again King Netori wedded his younger half-sister the Lady Mihara, and begot children: King Naka-tsu-hiko; ²⁰¹³ next ¹⁹⁹⁴ i.e., the Emperor Ō-jin's.

¹⁹⁹⁵ The import of this compound is not clear.

¹⁹⁹⁶ i.e., "the younger princess, the truly young princess."

¹⁹⁹⁷ i.e., "the great lord."

¹⁹⁹⁸ Oho-hodo no miko. The signification of Oho-hodo is obscure. Motowori surmises it to have been originally the name of a place.

¹⁹⁹⁹ i.e., "the great middle princess of Osaka. Osaka is the name of a place in Yamato. The word "middle" should by the analogy of other such genealogies indicate the fact that this princess was the fourth child out of seven. Here however she is mentioned second, and the same designation is applied to the two next daughters. There is evidently some confusion in the tradition.

²⁰⁰⁰ i.e., "the middle princess of Tawi,"—a place in Kahachi.

²⁰⁰¹ i.e., the middle princess of Tamiya.

²⁰⁰² i.e., "the lady Koto-fushi of Fuji-hara." But the meaning of Kato fushi is obscure, and Motowori surmises it to be an alternative or corrupt form of Sotohoshi. (For the celebrated princess of the latter name see Sect. CXXXVII, Note 9.) Fujihara is the name of a place in Yamato, and signifies "wistaria-moor."

²⁰⁰³ Torime no miko. This name is obscure.

²⁰⁰⁴ Sane no miko. Motowori believes sane to stand erroneously for sami; but both forms are obscure.

²⁰⁰⁵ The Japanese word includes both genders.

²⁰⁰⁶ Mikuni no kimi. Mikuni is the name of a well-known place in the province of Echizen. It signifies "three countries."

²⁰⁰⁷ Hata no kimi. There are several places called Hata, and it is not known which of them is here intended. The signification of the name is also uncertain.

²⁰⁰⁸ Okinaga no kimi. See Sect. LXII, Note 31.

²⁰⁰⁹ Sakata no Saka-bito no kimi. This is Motowori's restoration of an apparently corrupt text. Sakata and Sakabito are both taken to be names of places, the first of a district in Afumi, the second of a place in Settsu.

Sakabito (酒人) seems a very curious compound for the name of a place. Moreover the double title is unusual, and it may be thought that the word "Dukes" has fallen out of the text, and that in reality two families were intended to be spoken of.

²⁰¹⁰ Yamaji no kimi. Yamaji ("mountain road") is supposed by Motowori to be the name of a place,—perhaps in the province of Higo.

²⁰¹¹ Tsukushi no Meta no kimi. Tsukushi is the old name of the whole of the South-Western island of the Japanese archipelago and Meta the name of a place in the province of Hizen in that island. The etymology of Meta is uncertain.

²⁰¹² Fuse no kimi. Fuse is the name of uncertain import found in several provinces. It is not known which is meant to be here designated.

²⁰¹³ Naka-tsu-hiko no miko, i.e., "the middle prince," a designation which would lead one to expect to find mention of an elder brother.

King Iwa-shiha ²⁰¹⁴ (Two Kings.) Again the child of King Kata-shiha ²⁰¹⁵ was King Kuni. ²⁰¹⁶

²⁰¹⁴ Iwashima no miko. Iwashima seems to be the name of a place, but the signification of Iha (not to be confounded with iha "stone" or "rock") is altogether obscure.

²⁰¹⁵ Katashiha no miko. This prince has not been mentioned in the previous genealogies, which is curious. Katashiha is the name of a place in Chikuzen, and signifies "hard rock."

²⁰¹⁶ Kunu no miko. Kunu is altogether obscure.

SECTION CXVIII.—EMPEROR Ō-JIN (PART XV.—HIS AGE AND PLACE OF BURIAL)

The august years of this Heavenly Sovereign Homuda were altogether one hundred and thirty. His august mausoleum is on the mound of Mofusu ²⁰¹⁷ at Wega in Kafuchi.

²⁰¹⁷ Or, as Motowori reads it, Mofushi. The etymology is uncertain. Wega has already appeared in Sect. CIII (Note 3). The Old Printed Edition and some Manuscripts have at the conclusion of this volume the following note: 百舌鳥陵也, "It is the mausoleum of Mozu." But Mozu is in the province of Idzumi, and all the later editions discard this note as an interpolation.

Volume III²⁰¹⁸SECTION CXIX.—EMPEROR NIN-TOKU (PART I.— GENEALOGIES)

His Augustness Oho-sazaki dwelt in the palace of Takatsu²⁰¹⁹ at Naniha, and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded (the Empress²⁰²⁰) Her Augustness Iha-no-hime,²⁰²¹ daughter of Kadzuraki-no-sotsu-biko,²⁰²² and begot august children: His Augustness Ohoye-no-izaho-wake;²⁰²³ next the Middle King of the Inlet of Sumi;²⁰²⁴ next His Augustness Midzu-ha-wake of Tajihi;²⁰²⁵ next His Augustness the Noble Wo-asadzuma-no-waku-go²⁰²⁶ (four Deities.) Again he wedded Princess Kamina, daughter of the Duke of Muragata in Himuka, as mentioned above,²⁰²⁷ and begot august children: Hatabi-no-oho-iratsuko,²⁰²⁸ another name for whom was the King of Great Kusaka;²⁰²⁹ next Hatabi-no-waki-iratsume,²⁰³⁰ another name for whom was Her Augustness Princess Nagahi,²⁰³¹ and another name was Her Augustness Waka-kusaka-be²⁰³² (Two Deities.) Again he wedded his younger half-sister Yata-no-waki-iratsume²⁰³³ Again he wedded his younger half-sister Uji-no-waki-iratsume. These two Deities had no august children. Altogether the august children of this Heavenly Sovereign Oho-sakaki [numbered] in all six Deities, (Five Kings and one Queen). So His Augustness Izaho-wake [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. Next His Augustness Tajihi-no midzu-ha-wake likewise ruled the Empire. Next His Augustness the Noble Oh-asadzuma-no-waku-go likewise ruled the Empire.²⁰³⁴ ²⁰¹⁸ Literally, "lower volume" (there being three in all). See Author's Preface, Note 1.

²⁰¹⁹ I.e., "high port."

²⁰²⁰ Motowori surmises that the reason why the characters signifying "Empress" are in all the text here written in small characters is on account of this personage not having been of Imperial birth.

²⁰²¹ I.e., "the rock princess." Motowori supposes the name to be indicative of prosperity and long life.

²⁰²² See Sect. LXI, Note 55,

²⁰²³ I.e., "the elder brother lord Izaho," the latter name being of uncertain import.

²⁰²⁴ Sumi-no ye-no-naka-tsu-miko. Both the phrase "middle king" and the Inlet of Sumi have been already commented on.

²⁰²⁵ Tajihi no midzu-ha-wake. Tajihi is the name of a place in Kahachi. The traditional origin of its application to this will be found in Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXXV, p. 6. Midzu-ha-wake probably means "the lord with the beautiful teeth."

²⁰²⁶ Wo-asadzuma-no-waku-go no sukune. Asadzuma is the name of a place in Yamato, and wo (though written 男) seems to be the slightly Honorific Prefix wo (女) whose proper signification is "small" Waku-go means "younger child."

²⁰²⁷ See Sect. CVII.

²⁰²⁸ I.e., "the great lord of Hatabi." Hatabi is altogether obscure.

²⁰²⁹ Oha-kusaka no miko. For Kusaka see Sect. CI, Note 2.

²⁰³⁰ I.e., "the young lady of Hatabi." Conf. Note 1 I.

²⁰³¹ Nagahi-hime. This name is obscure.

²⁰³² Kusaka-be is an alternative form of Kusaka. The compound therefore signifies "young princess of Kusaka."

²⁰³³ This name and the following have already appeared in the genealogies of the preceding reign (Sect. CIV.)

²⁰³⁴ These were the Emperors Ri-chiu, Han-zei, and In-giyo.

SECTION CXX: EMPEROR NIN-TOKU (PART II.—VARIOUS DEEDS)

In the august reign of this Heavenly Sovereign the Kadzuraki Tribe ²⁰³⁵ was established as the august proxy of the Empress, Her Augustness Iha-no-hime. Again the Mibu Tribe ²⁰³⁶ was established as the august proxy of the Heir Apparent, His Augustness Izaho-wake. Again the Tajihi Tribe ²⁰³⁷ was established as the august proxy of His Augustness Midzuna-wake. Again the Oho-kusaka Tribe ²⁰³⁸ was established as the august proxy of King Oho-kusaka, and the Waka-kusaka Tribe ²⁰³⁹ was established as the august proxy of King Waga-kusake-be. Again people from Hada were set to labour, and the embankment at Mamuta ²⁰⁴⁰ and also the granaries of Manuta were made. Again the Pool of Wani ²⁰⁴¹ and the Pool of Yosemi were made. Again the Naniha Channel ²⁰⁴² was dug, and [the waters of the rivers] led to the sea. Again the Wobashi Channel ²⁰⁴³ was dug. Again the port of the inlet of Sumi ²⁰⁴⁴ was established.

²⁰³⁵ Kadzuraki be. For Kadzuraki see Sect. LV, Note 1.

²⁰³⁶ Mibu-be. Motowori quotes approvingly a derivation of the "gentile name" of Mibu from Bi-fuku- mon (美福門), the name of a gate which the first bearer of the name is related to have constructed. Taking into account the letter-changes which occurred in older times in the passage of words from Chinese into Japanese, the etymology is plausible enough.

²⁰³⁷ Tajihi-be. Tajihi is the name of a place in Kahachi, and is of uncertain origin.

²⁰³⁸ Oho-kusaka-be. This tribe of course took its name simply from that of Prince Oho-kusaka.

²⁰³⁹ Waka-kusaka-be. A similar observation to that in the last applies to this name.

²⁰⁴⁰ See Sect. LIII, Note I.

²⁰⁴¹ Wani no ike, in the province of Kahachi. Wani signifies "crocodile," and it was also the name of the Korean personage mentioned in Sect. CX (Note 6). But the reason why the Pool here spoken of was so called does not appear. The Pool of Yosami has already been mentioned in Sect. LXII (Note 85). Motowori supposes that it must have dried up during the interim.

²⁰⁴² Naniha no hori-ye. Motowori tells us that the regularization of p. 336 the channels of the Yodo and Yamato Rivers, whose mouths nearly meet at this point with various intersecting branches, is what is here intended to be referred to.

²⁰⁴³ Wobashi no ye. Wo-bashi ("little bridge") is the name of a village in the province of Settsu.

²⁰⁴⁴ Suminoye no tsu. Close of Naniha; it is the modern Sumiyoshi. Conf. Sect. X, Note 22.

SECTION CXXI.—EMPEROR NIN-TOKU [PART III.—HE REMITS THE TAXES)

Thereupon the Heavenly Sovereign, ascending a lofty mountain and looking on the land all round, spoke, saying: "In the whole land there rises no smoke; the land is all poverty-stricken. So I remit ²⁰⁴⁵ all people's taxes and [forced labour] from now till three years [hence.]" Therefore the great palace became dilapidated, and the rain leaked in everywhere; but no repairs were made. The rain that leaked in was caught in troughs, ²⁰⁴⁶ and [the inmates] removed from [its reach] to places where there was no leakage. When later [the Heavenly Sovereign]] looked on all the land, the smoke was abundant in the land. So finding the people rich, he now exacted taxes and forced labour. Therefore the peasantry ²⁰⁴⁷ prospered, and did not suffer from forced labour. So in praise of that august reign, it was called the reign of the Emperor-Sage. ²⁰⁴⁸

²⁰⁴⁵ Motowori's reading of this Verb in the Imperative Mood (as if containing an order addressed by the monarch to his ministers) seems less natural than the order reading in the Indicative, which accordingly the translator has followed.

²⁰⁴⁶ There is uncertainty as to the exact character in the original. p. 337 But the older editions read it as the Japanese word hako, "boxes." while Motowori prefers hi, "tubes." "Troughs" seems to conciliate both views, and to be also appropriate to the use mentioned in the text.

²⁰⁴⁷ Or simply, "the people." But the expression 百姓 is generally used in Japanese of the peasantry only.

²⁰⁴⁸ 聖帝; If, following most texts, we omitted the final character 世, "reign," the English translation would be "in praise of that august reign, (the Heavenly Sovereign) was called the Emperor-Sage."

SECTION CXXII.—EMPEROR NIN-TOKU (PART IV.—HE LOVES PRINCESS KURO)

His Empress, Her Augustness Iha-no-hime, was exceedingly jealous. So the concubines employed by the Heavenly Sovereign could not even peep inside the palace; and if anything happened, ²⁰⁴⁹ [the Empress] stamped with jealousy. Then the Heavenly Sovereign, hearing of the regular beauty of Princess Kuro, ²⁰⁵⁰ daughter of the Suzerain of Ama in Kibi, ²⁰⁵¹ and having sent for her, employed her. But she, afraid of the Empress's jealousy, fled down to her native land, The Heavenly Sovereign, gazing from an upper story upon Princess Kuro's departure by boat upon the sea, sang saying:

"In the offing there are rows of small boats. My wife Masadzuko of Kurozaki goes down towards her [native] land."²⁰⁵²

So the Empress was very angry on hearing this august Song, and sent people to the great strand ²⁰⁵³ to drive Princess Kuro ashore, and chase her away on foot.²⁰⁵⁴ Thereupon the Heavenly Sovereign, for love of Princess Kuro, deceived the Empress, saying that he wanted to see the Island of Ahaji. ²⁰⁵⁵ And when he made his progress and was in the Island of Ahaji, he, gazing afar, sang saying:

"When, having departed from the point of wave-beaten Naniha, I look at the country,—the Island of Aha, the Is-land of Onogoro, and also the Island of Ajimasa are visible. The Island of Saketsu is visible." ²⁰⁵⁶

²⁰⁴⁹ Motowori shows by collating various passages in other ancient works that this is the probable signification of the curious expression in the original, kotodateba (言立者 for 事立者). The reference of course is to the occurrence of anything noteworthy among the concubines, such as the birth of a son, etc.

²⁰⁵⁰ Kuro-hime, i.e., "black princess" probably meaning "black-haired princess."

²⁰⁵¹ Kibi no Ama no atahe. Of this family nothing is known. Ama signifies "fisherman." Kibi is the name of a province.

²⁰⁵² Thus interpreted (according to Moribe), the general sense of the Song is quite clear. The word Masadzuko, considered by Moribe to be one of the names of Princess Kuro, is however not so understood by Motowori, who is inclined to see in it rather an Honorific description of her. Kurozaki likewise (i.e., "black cape," the word kuro seemingly containing an allusion to the name of the Princess) is but the best of many emendations of the name as it stands in the text, viz., Furozaya. See Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXXV. p. 33, for all the possible emendations proposed by him or his predecessors.

²⁰⁵³ Scil, of the neighbourhood of Naniha. Or possible Oho-ura ("Great Strand") should be taken as the name of a place, though Motowori does not suggest such a view.

²⁰⁵⁴ i.e., to make her perform the journey on foot.

²⁰⁵⁵ See Sect. V, Note 3.

²⁰⁵⁶ Moribe, commenting on the import of this Song, says: Though the alleged reason was a tour of inspection, it was truly out of love for Princess Kuro that the Monarch had undertaken the journey. When her vessel could no longer be descried, he could still alas! see the islands that remained behind,—the Island of Aha and the Island of Ajimasa; he could still, alas! see the Islands of Onogoro and Saketsu. Alas for him left alone, parted from his love! Though he spoke not openly, those around him understood the under-current of his "words."—"Wave-beaten" is the accepted interpretation of oshiteru ya (or oshiteru), the Pillow-Word for Naniha. For the Islands of Aha and Onogoro see respectively Sect. IV, Note 5 and Sect. iii, Note 5. Of the Islands of Ajimasa and Saketsu nothing is known. Ajimasa is the name of a species of palm, the Livistona sinensis, and Motowori supposes that one of the islands in that neighbourhood may anciently have received its name from the palm-trees growing on it. Palms of any kind are, however, not very common in Japan, and seem only to grow when specially cultivated.

Forthwith passing on from that island, he made a progress to the land of Kibi. Then Her Augustness Princess Kuro- made him grandly reside at a place among the mountain-fields, ²⁰⁵⁷ and presented to him great august food, When for this [purpose] she plucked cabbage in that place to boil into great august soup, the Heavenly Sovereign went to the place where the maiden was plucking the cabbage, and sang, saying:

"Oh! how delightful it is to pluck with a person of Kibi the cabbage sown in the mountain fields!" ²⁰⁵⁸

When the Heavenly Sovereign made his progress up, ²⁰⁵⁹

Princess Kuro presented an august ²⁰⁶⁰ Song saying:

"Even though the west wind blow up towards Yamato, and the clouds part, and we be separated, shall I forget [thee]?" ²⁰⁶¹

Again she sang, saying:

"Whose spouse is it that goes towards Yamato? Whose spouse is it that creeps from beneath like hidden water?" ²⁰⁶²

²⁰⁵⁷ Motowori thinks we should in this place understand the word yamagata (for yama-agata) as the name of a place. But in the Song which immediately follows, it must certainly be taken in its etymological sense of "mountain-fields," and it seems therefore quite inconsistent to translate it differently here. Moreover it is allowed that no such place as Yamagata in Kibi is anywhere made mention of.

²⁰⁵⁸ The import of this Song is perfectly clear, "the person of Kibi "being of course the Imperial poet's lady-love.

²⁰⁵⁹ i.e., was about to start back to the capital, which was in the province of Settsu.

²⁰⁶⁰ This Honorific seems so out of place (seeing that it is not applied to the Emperor's own Songs given in this Section), that it is supposed by the commentators to be an erroneous addition to the text.

²⁰⁶¹ We might also translate thus: "Even though we be separated, as the clouds that part owing to the west wind blowing up towards Yamato, etc.;"—for the initial lines of the poem which contain the allusion to the wind and to the clouds are simply a Preface, and their import may therefore at will be either considered separately, or else made continuous with that of the rest of the poem.

²⁰⁶² The meaning of this Song I is: "Whose spouse is it that returns to Yamato? Whose spouse is it that comes thus secretly to make love to me, like a stream flowing underground?"—The allusion contained in the twice repeated words "whose spouse" is of course to the Empress. The poetess, full of tenderness or the Emperor, regrets for his sake, as well as for her own, that he should be the husband of so jealous' a wife. "Hidden water is the accepted interpretation of the Pillow-Word kontoridzu no, which is with apparent reason supposed to be a contraction of komori-midzu no.

SECTION CXXIII. EMPEROR NIN-TOKU PART V.—THE EMPRESS RETIRES TO YAMASHIRO)

After this time the Empress made a progress to the land of Ki in order to pluck aralia-leaves for a copious feast; ²⁰⁶³ and in the mean while the Heavenly Sovereign wedded Yata-no-waki-iratsume. Hereupon, when the Empress was returning in her august vessel loaded full of aralia-leaves, a coolie from Kozhima ²⁰⁶⁴ in the land of Kibi, who was in the service of the Superintendent of the Water-Directors, ²⁰⁶⁵ being on his way off to his own country, met at the great passage ²⁰⁶⁶ of Naniha the vessel of a lady of the train ²⁰⁶⁷ who had got behind, and forthwith told her, saying: "The Heavenly Sovereign has recently ²⁰⁶⁸ wedded Yata-no-waki-iratsume, and plays with her day and night. It must probably be because the Empress has not heard of this thing, that she quietly makes progress for pleasure." Then the lady of the train, having heard this narrative, forthwith pursued and reached the august vessel, and reported everything exactly as the coolie had told it. Hereupon the Empress, greatly vexed and angry, threw away into the sea all the aralia-leaves which she had put on board the august vessel. So the place,[where she did so] is called by the name of Cape Mitsu. ²⁰⁶⁹ Forthwith without entering the palace, but taking her august vessel [from it] ²⁰⁷⁰ and ascending the channel ²⁰⁷¹ against the current, she made a progress up into Yamashiro by the river; ²⁰⁷² At this time she sang, saying:

"Oh! the river of Yamashiro where the seedlings grow in succession! As I ascend, ascend the river, oh! on the bank of the river [there] stands growing asashibu!—a sashibu-tree; below it stands growing a broad-foliaged five hundred[-fold branching] true camellia-tree; oh! he who is brilliant like its blossoms, widely powerful like its foliage, is the great lord." ²⁰⁷³

²⁰⁶³ See Sect. CVII, Note 7.

²⁰⁶⁴ I.e., "small island." It is first mentioned in Sect V (Note 29).

²⁰⁶⁵ See Sect. XLVII, Note 18.

²⁰⁶⁶ Oho watari. The mouth of the River Yedo is meant to be designated by this name.

²⁰⁶⁷ The original, expression kuru-bito-me (倉人女) is obscure, being met with nowhere else in Japanese literature. Motowori conjectures that the function exercised by this lady. was one connected with the Emperor's privy purse.

²⁰⁶⁸ The text has the character 皆, "all," which make no sense; and Motowori (following Mabuchi) reasonably emends it to 比日, "recently," "just now."

²⁰⁶⁹ Mitsu no saki. Mitsu, signifying "three," is supposed by the author to refer to the three-cornered leaves of the aralia (the name of the latter being mitsuna gashiha); but a more likely opinion is that which would have us take mitzu as two words, in the sense of "august harbour." In the parallel passage of the "Chronicles," we are told that the place was called Kashiha no watari, i.e., "Oak passage."

²⁰⁷⁰ I.e., going on up the river without stopping at Naniha where the palace was.

²⁰⁷¹ Jr., the artificial bed of the river mentioned in Sect. CXX, Note, 8.

²⁰⁷² I.e., the river Yedo.

²⁰⁷³ The meaning of this Song is: "As I make my way up the river by boat, I see a sashibu (the name of a tree which cannot now be identified), below which,—that is to say nearer to the water,—there grows a camellia-tree, wide-spreading and full of blossoms. Ah! how the sight of the sturdy brilliant beauty of this camellia-tree brings back my lord and master to my mind!"—It must be remembered that in Japan the camellia-trees grow to a size far superior to that reached by their representatives in Europe. Tsuginefu, rendered according to the view taken by Motowori and Moribe by the phrase "where the seedlings grow in succession," is the Pillow-Word for Yamashiro, and its import is disputed. The interpretation here adopted considers it to refer to the regular succession of young trees planted on a mountain's side when a tract of older timber has been cut

Forthwith going round by Yamashiro, ²⁰⁷⁴ and arriving at the entrance of the Nara Mountain, ²⁰⁷⁵ she sang, saying:

"Oh! the river of Yamashiro where the seedlings grow in succession! As I ascend, ascend to Miya, I pass Nara, I pass Yamato with its shield of mountains; and the country I fain would see is Takamiya in Kadzuraki, the neighbourhood of my home." ²⁰⁷⁶

Having sung thus, she returned and entered for some time into the house of a person from Kara ²⁰⁷⁷ named Nurinomi ²⁰⁷⁸ at Tsutsuki. ²⁰⁷⁹ down. Mabuchi, in his "Dictionary of Pillow-Words," sees in it, on the contrary, a reference to the rising of peak upon peak in a mountainous district (tsugi-ne fu—次嶺經). Both interpretations rest on the connection between this term and yama, the first half of the name of the province of Yamashiro, which it qualifies.

"Five hundred[-fold-branching]" and "true" are ornamental epithets applied by the poetess to the camellia-tree. Moribe would take the syllable ma, "true," in the sense of ha, "leaf but this seems less good."

²⁰⁷⁴ For the straight road from Naniha in Settsu-to Nara in Yamato would have taken her through the province of Kafuchi. and not through Yamashiro.

²⁰⁷⁵ i.e., the pass or hill leading from the district of Sagara in Yamashiro to Nara in Yamato. For Nara see Sect. LXXII, Note 23.

²⁰⁷⁶ This Song expresses the Empress's desire to return to her parental house at Takamiya in the district of Kadzuraki,—a desire which, however, her restless frame of mind did not allow her to fulfil.—The Pillow-Word for Yamashiro, which here recurs, has already been discussed in Note 11. There are two other Pillow-Words in this Song,—awoniyoshi, which is prefixed to Nara, and wo-date (or wo-date-yama according to the old reading, or wo-date tatsua according to another reading), which is prefixed to Yamato. The former of these is so obscure that, rather than attempt to render it into English, the translator prefers to refer the student to the remarks of the various commentators,—Mabuchi s.v. in his "Dictionary of Pillow-Words," Motowori in his Commentary, Vol. XXXVI, pp. 22-24, and Moribe in loco. Wodate [-yama] seems to refer undoubtedly to the circle of mountains that guard the approach to the province of Yamato, and it has been rendered accordingly. The great difficulty of the Song lies in the line rendered "ascend to Miya," and the commentators from Keichiū downwards make all sorts of efforts to explain it. Moribe's view, according to which the word should be regarded as a familiar abbreviation of Takamiya, naturally used by one whose native place it was, seems the most acceptable. Motowori takes the line to signify: "When I ascend past the palace [of Naniha]."

²⁰⁷⁷ 韓, i.e., Korea.

²⁰⁷⁸ For Nuri no omi, i.e., "the Grandee of Nuri." Nuri is probably a corrupt form of some Korean name.

²⁰⁷⁹ Or Tsudzuki, in Yamashiro. Etymology obscure.

SECTION CXXIV.—EMPEROR NIN-TOKU (PART VI.—HE FOLLOWS THE EMPRESS INTO YAMASHIRO)

The Heavenly Sovereign, having heard that the Empress had made a progress up by Yamashiro, made a person,—a retainer called by the name of Toriyama,²⁰⁸⁰—give an august Song,²⁰⁸¹ which said:

"Reach [her] in Yamashiro, Toriyama! Reach [her]! reach [her]! Ah! wilt thou reach and meet my beloved spouse?"²⁰⁸²

Again he continued by despatching Kuchiko, Grandee of Wani,²⁰⁸³ and sang, saying:

"Wilt thou be without thinking even of the Heart that is in the moor of Ohowiko, the moor of Ohowiko, that is by Takaki at Mimoro?"²⁰⁸⁴

Again he sang, saying:

"If indeed I had pillowed [my head] on the white arm like the whiteness of the roots, the great roots, that were beaten with wooden hoes by the women of Yamashiro where the seedlings grow in succession, [then] mightest thou say, 'I know [thee] not'." ²⁰⁸⁵

²⁰⁸⁰ This name signifies "bird-mountain." The commentators presume that it contains an allusion to the fact of its bearer being an Imperial courier.

²⁰⁸¹ This is the actual sense conveyed by the original 使舍人名謂鳥山人送御歌, and we naturally infer that Toriyama was made the bearer to the Empress of the following Song. The Song itself, however, is addressed not to her, but to Toriyama on his departure. On the other hand, the two poems which follow are evidently for the Empress, and it is impossible to suppose that the first messenger was not likewise intended to convey to her some poetic missive. All that we can do is to render the text as it stands, and to suppose it corrupt.

²⁰⁸² The meaning of this Song is: "O Toriyama! pursue her into Yamashiro! I tremble at the thought of the possibility of thy not finding her."

²⁰⁸³ Wani no omi Kuchiko (further on he is mentioned as Kuchiko no omi, i.e., "the Grandee (of) Kuchiko.") Kuchi-ko may be interpreted to mean "mouth child" and Moribe thinks that this personage was so called on account of the verbal messages of which he was made the bearer. The translator would prefer to consider ko as an abbreviation of hiko, "prince," especially as the sister's name is Kuchi-hime, where the word hime must mean "princess."

²⁰⁸⁴ This Song is so obscure that Motowori and Moribe differ completely as to its interpretation. The translator has followed Moribe, though by no means persuaded that the latter has hit on the proper signification. According to this view, the Emperor makes a pun on the word "heart," which is supposed to have been the name of a pool situated on the moor of Ohowiko near Takaki at Mimoro,—all names of places with which the Empress was familiar,—and reproaches her for having no thought of his heart which beats so lovingly for her. Motowori, on the other hand, thinks that the poem proper consists only of its last two lines (in the English translation they necessarily I come first): "Wilt thou be without thinking even of the heart?"—and that all the rest is a "Preface" to the Pillow-Word kimo-mukafu by which the word kokoro, "heart," is preceded. As for ohowiko and takaki, they are taken, not as names of places, but as common Nouns. According to this view of the structure of the Song, it ceases (with the exception of its last two lines) to have any rational signification, and it is needless to attempt to translate it for the English reader. Persons familiar with Japanese are therefore referred to Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXXVI, pp. 34-36.

²⁰⁸⁵ The meaning of this Song is: "If thou and I had not so long been spouses, then indeed mightest thou break with me, and declare that thou knowest me not. But how canst thou so far forget our wedded life as to desert me now?"—"The "great root," oho-ne, is the modern dai-kon (Raphanus sativus), a kind of radish which is a favourite vegetable with the Japanese and is distinguished by its brilliantly white appearance. "Beaten" here signifies "dug up." The use of the Past Tense is curious. Ko-guha, here in accordance with Motowori's view

So when the Grandee of Kuchiko was repeating this august Song [to the Empress,] it was raining heavily. Then upon his, without avoiding the rain, coming and prostrating himself at the front door of the palace, ²⁰⁸⁶ she on the contrary went out at the back door; and on his coming and prostrating himself at the back door of the palace, she on the contrary went out at the front door. Then, as he crept backwards and forwards on his knees in the middle of the court, the streams of water ²⁰⁸⁷ reached to his loins. Owing to the grandee being clad in a garment dyed ²⁰⁸⁸ green and with a red cord, the streams of water brushed against the red cord, and the green all changed to red colour. Now the Grandee of Kuchiko's younger sister Princess Kuchi ²⁰⁸⁹ was in the service of the Empress. ²⁰⁹⁰ So Princess Kuchi sang saying:

"Oh! how tearful is my lord-elder brother, saying things in the palace of Tsutsuki in Yamashiro!" ²⁰⁹¹

Then when the Empress asked the reason, ²⁰⁹² she replied, saying: "He is my brother the Grandee of Kuchiko." Thereupon the Grandee of Kuchiko and also his younger sister Princess Kuchi and likewise Nurinomi [all] three took counsel [together,] and sent to report to the Heavenly Sovereign, saying: "The reason of the Empress's progress is that there are [some] insects reared by Nurinomi,—strange insects changing in three ways, ²⁰⁹³ once becoming creeping insects, once becoming cocoons, ²⁰⁹⁴ and once becoming flying birds ²⁰⁹⁵—and it is only to go and look at them that she has entered into [Nurinomi's house.] She has no strange intentions." ²⁰⁹⁶ When they had thus reported, the Heavenly Sovereign said: "That being so, I want to go and see [these insects,] as I think [they must be] strange; [and with these words] he made a progress up from the great palace. When he entered into Nurinomi's house, Nurinomi, had already presented to the Empress the three-fold insects reared by him. Then the Heavenly Sovereign augustly stood at the door of the palace where the Empress-dwelt, and sang, saying:

rendered "wooden hoes," is interpreted by Moribe to mean "little hoes." "Where the seedlings grow in succession" is the English rendering of tsugi-ne fu, the Pillow-Word for Yamashiro (see Sect. CXXIII Note 11).

²⁰⁸⁶ The Empress was lodging with a private individual, but her presence warrants the application of the term "palace" to his house.

²⁰⁸⁷ It was raining too hard for the water to stop on the surface in the shape of puddles, so it streamed off in little rivulets.

²⁰⁸⁸ Literally, "rubbed." See Introduction p. xxx. Instead of "green," we might equally well translate by "blue." The garment intended must be the upper garment or coat.

²⁰⁸⁹ Kuchi-hime.

²⁰⁹⁰ Literally, "respectfully served the Empress."

²⁰⁹¹ The meaning of these lines, which can only be called poetry because they are in metre, is plain: in them the speaker draws the Empress's attention to the pitiful condition of the messenger who is doing his best to deliver to her the Emperor's message. Probably the reading in our text has been corrupted; for that in the "Chronicles," which may be translated thus; "Oh! how tearful am I when I see my lord elder brother," etc. is much preferable.

²⁰⁹² Scil. of her attendant thus taking the messenger's part.

²⁰⁹³ Literally, "colours."

²⁰⁹⁴ This is Motowori's conjectural restoration of the reading of this word, which in all the texts is hopelessly corrupt.

²⁰⁹⁵ According to another reading, "flying insects."

²⁰⁹⁶ I.e., "she is not meditating any evil conduct."

"Pure as the great roots that were beaten with their wooden hoes by the women of Yamashiro where the seedings grow in succession:—it is because thou spokest tumultuously that I come in here [with my retainers numerous] as the more and more flourishing trees that I look across at." ²⁰⁹⁷

These six Songs by the Heavenly Sovereign and by the Empress are Changing Songs which are Quiet Songs. ²⁰⁹⁸

²⁰⁹⁷ The Song consists of two divisions, the first of which is but a Preface for the second, the pivot being formed by the word sawa-sawa-ni, which has the meaning of "pure" "cool," or "refreshing," with reference to what precedes it, and the meaning of "tumultuously" (sawasawa ni—sawagaskiku) when taken together with what follows. The difficulties which present themselves in the first division have all been explained in Note 11 to the last and Note 6 to the present Section. The general sense of the second division is plain enough; but the precise application of the comparison to the "more and more flourishing tree" is obscure. Motowori's view has been adopted by the translator, and the words in brackets supplemented accordingly. Moribe prefers to consider that the reference is to the repeated visits first of the Emperor's messengers and afterwards of the Emperor himself. The words "look across at" must be explained by supposing that the trees were in the neighbourhood of Nurinomi's house; they were shoots springing up from roots that had been cut down close to the ground.

²⁰⁹⁸ The commentators thus explain these obscure expressions: "A Quiet Song is one which is sung to a tranquil tune. A Changing Song is one temporarily sung while the tone (mode?) is changing." The six Songs in question must be supposed to have combined both characteristics.

SECTION CXXV.—EMPEROR NIN-TOKU (PART VIII.—HE LOVES YATA-NO-WAKI-IRATSUME)

The Heavenly Sovereign, loving Yata-no-waki-iratsume, deigned to send her an august Song. That Song said:

"Will the one sedge-stem of Yata, having no children, wither as it stands? Poor sedge-moor! Sedge-moor indeed is what I may say—poor pure girl!" ²⁰⁹⁹

Then Yata-no-waki-iratsume replied in a Song, saying:

"Even though the one sedge stem of Yata be alone, if the Great Lord say it is right even though it be alone [it is right.]" ²¹⁰⁰

So the Yata Tribe ²¹⁰¹ was established as the august proxy of Yata-no-waki-iratsume.

²⁰⁹⁹ In this Song the Emperor condoles with his mistress on her childlessness: "Will the single sedge on the moor of Yata die without leaving any offspring? Sedge, indeed! Yes, sedge is the term I use for my metaphor, but what is in my thoughts is the girl I love."—There is in the original a jeu-de-mots, not capable of translation into English, between suge or suga, "sedge, and sugashi pure."

²¹⁰⁰ The girl replies: "Even though I be childless. I care not if my lord cares not."

²¹⁰¹ Yata-be.

SECTION CXXVI.—EMPEROR NIN-TOKU (PART VIII.— DEATH OF KING HAYABUSA-WAKE AND QUEEN MEDORI)

Again the Heavenly Sovereign begged for his younger half-sister Queen Medori, using as middle-man his younger brother King Haya-busa-wake. Then Queen Medori spoke to King Hayabusa-wake, saying: "Owing to the violence of the Empress, [the Heavenly Sovereign] has not deigned to take Yata-no-waki-iratsume [into the Palace.] So I will not respectfully serve him. I will become the wife of Thine Augustness." Forthwith they wedded each other, wherefore King Hayabusa-wake made no report [to the Heavenly Sovereign. ²¹⁰²] Then the Heavenly Sovereign, going straight to the place where Queen Medori dwelt, stood on the door-sill of the palace. Hereupon, Queen Medori being at her loom, was weaving garments. Then the Heavenly Sovereign sang saying:

"Oh! for whom may be the garments that my Great Lady Medori weaves?" ²¹⁰³

Queen Medori replied in a Song saying:

"For an august veil for the high-going Falcon-Lord." ²¹⁰⁴

So the Heavenly Sovereign, perceiving her feelings, returned into the palace. At this time ²¹⁰⁵ when her husband King Hayabusa-wake came, his wife Queen Medori sang, saying:

"The lark flies to heaven. Oh! high-going Falcon-Lord, catch the wren." ²¹⁰⁶

The Heavenly Sovereign, hearing this Song, ²¹⁰⁷ forthwith raised an army, wishing to slay King Hayabusa and Queen Medori, who then fled away together, and ascended Mount Kurahashi. ²¹⁰⁸ Thereupon King Hayabusa-wake sang, saying:

"Owing to the steepness of ladder-like Mount Kurahashi, being unable to clamber [up] the rocks, oh! she takes my hand! ²¹⁰⁹

²¹⁰² Scil. of the success of his mediation.

²¹⁰³ Or, "for whom is the loom [employed], with which my Great Lady Medori weaves?"—The word hata in Archaic Japanese signifies both "garment" and the instrument which is used to weave a garment, i.e. a "loom" (服 and 機). In later times the second meaning has prevailed to the exclusion of the first.

²¹⁰⁴ There is here a play on the name of the Queen's paramour Hayabusa-wake, which signifies "Falcon-Lord" as in the translation—The parallel passage of the "Chronicles" gives these two Songs as a single one which is put into the mouth of Queen Medori's handmaidens,—is a more acceptable version of the incident.

²¹⁰⁵ Motowori suspects that there is here an error in the text, which should, according to him, read: "After this."

²¹⁰⁶ The gist of this Song is an instigation to murder the Emperor (whose name was Oho-sazaki, i.e., "Great Wren." Conf. Sect. CIV, Note 18), addressed to the singer's husband (whose name was Hayabusa-wake, i.e., "Falcon Lord"). But the allusion to the lake remains obscure. Keichiū suggests that it is simply mentioned as a term of comparison for the falcon's power of flight, while Motowori opines that the meaning rather is: "The lark flies so high up to heaven that it would be hard to catch it; but the wren is an easy prey."

²¹⁰⁷ Viz., as may be supposed, repeated by some fourth person.

²¹⁰⁸ Kurahashi-yama, in Yamato.

²¹⁰⁹ The Song, like the next, is too clear to stand in need of explanation. "Ladder-like" is an attempt to render the force of the Pillow-Word hashi-tate. See Mabuchi's "Dictionary of Pillow-Words," s.v., for the exact force attributed to it by Mabuchi.

Again he sang, saying:

"Though ladder-like Mount Kurahashi be steep, it is not steep when I ascend it with my younger sister."

So when they fled thence, and reached Soni in Uda, ²¹¹⁰ the Imperials ²¹¹¹ army pursued, overtook, and slew them.

²¹¹⁰ For Uda see Sect. XLVI, Note, 14. The etymology of Soni is equally obscure.

²¹¹¹ The character 御, though read by the commentators with the usual Japanese Honorific mi, "august," has here its proper Chinese signification of "Imperial."

SECTION CXXVII.—EMPEROR NIN-TOKU (PART VIII.— QUEEN MEDORI'S ARMLET)

Chief Ohotate of Yamabe, ²¹¹² who was the generalissimo of that army, took the jewelled armlet which was wound round Queen Medori's august arm, and gave it to his own wife. After this time, when a copious feast ²¹¹³ was to be held, the women of the various families all went to court. Then the wife of Chief Ohotate came with that Queen's jewelled armlet wound round her own arm. Thereupon the Empress, Her Augustness Iha-no-hime, herself took the oak-leaves ²¹¹⁴[full] of great august liquor and graciously gave them to the women of the various families. Then the Empress, recognizing the jewelled armlet, gave [the wearer] no oak-leaf[-full] of great august liquor, but forthwith sent her away; ²¹¹⁵ and sending. for the husband, Chief Ohotate, said: "Owing to that King and Queen's impropriety, [the Emperor] deigned to send them away. This was nothing strange. And a slave such as thou despoils of the jewelled armlet that was wound round her august arm the body of his lady [that was still] warm, and gives it to his own wife!"—and forthwith he was condemned to death. ²¹¹⁶

²¹¹² Yamabe no Ohotate no murazhi. The "gentile name" was Yamabe no murazhi, and the personal name Ohotate, though the confused wording of this passage does not make it appear so. Yama-be signifies mountain (i.e., hunters') tribe. Oho-tate is "big shield."

²¹¹³ See Sect. CVII, Note 7.

²¹¹⁴ Or, perhaps rather "aralia-leaves" (Con/. Sect. CXXIII).

²¹¹⁵ Or, "had her dragged away."

²¹¹⁶ Literally, "was granted the punishment of death," or "(the Emperor) deigned to condemn him to death."

SECTION CXXVIII.—EMPEROR NIN-TOKU (PART IX.—A WILD-GOOSE LAYS AN EGG)

Another time, the Heavenly Sovereign, when about to hold a copious feast, ²¹¹⁷ made a progress to the Island of Hime, ²¹¹⁸ just when a wild-goose had laid an egg on that island. Then, sending for His Augustness the Noble Takeuchi, he asked him in a Song about the laying of an egg by a wild goose. This Song said:

"Court Noble of Uchi! thou indeed art a long-lived person. Hast thou [ever] heard of a wild-goose laying an egg in the land of Yamato?" ²¹¹⁹

Hereupon the Noble Take-uchi spoke in a song, saying:

"August Child of the high-shining Sun, it is indeed natural that thou shouldest deign to ask, it is indeed right that thou shouldest ask. I indeed am a long-lived person, [but] have not yet heard of a wild goose laying an egg in the land of Yamato." ²¹²⁰

Having thus spoken, he was granted the august ²¹²¹ lute and sang saying:

"Oh thou prince! the wild goose must have laid the egg because thou wilt at last rule." ²¹²²

This is a Congratulatory Incomplete Song. ²¹²³

²¹¹⁷ See Sect. CVII, 7.

²¹¹⁸ Hime-shima, i.e., "Princess Island." The name is supposed to be connected with that of the goddess of Himegoso mentioned near the end of Sect. CXIV, and first occurs in Sect. V (Note 33).

²¹¹⁹ The wild-goose goes far north at the approach of spring, and the translator is informed by Capt. Blakiston that the latter has not known p. 354 of any breeding even on the island of Yezo. The Emperor was therefore naturally astonished at so strange an occurrence as that of a wild-goose laying an egg in Yamato, and asks the Noble Take-uchi whether he had ever heard of the like of it before, Take-uchi being at that time more than two hundred years old (!) according to the chronology of the "Chronicles," and therefore the oldest and most experienced man in the Empire. — "Court Noble" represents the Japanese word Aso (for Asomi, believed by Motowori and Moribe to be derived from a se omi 吾兄臣, lit, "my elder brother minister" but used simply as a title), The words Uchi and Yamato are preceded in the original by their respective Pillow-Words tamaki-haru and soramitsu, whose force it is impossible to render in English, and whose origin indeed is obscure. The words rendered "laying an egg" are literally "giving birth to a child."

²¹²⁰ This Song is too clear to need explanation. As in the preceding one, Yamato is accompanied by the Pillow-Word sora-mitsu.

²¹²¹ Or, "Imperial."

²¹²² i.e., say Motowori and Moribe, who refer this episode to a time previous to Nin-toku's accession, "The wild-goose has laid an egg in token of the future accession to the throne." The translator prefers the view expressed by Keichiū in his Kō-Gan Shō, and adopted in the "Explanation of the Songs in the Chronicles of Japan," that the words tsuki na "at last," must here be taken in the sense of "long," and the Song interpreted to mean "The wild-goose lays an egg as an omen that thy reign will be a long one." This view is supported by the story in the "Chronicles," which places the Song in the Emperor's fiftieth year and gives him thirty-six years of subsequent existence, thus making the prophecy amply fulfil itself, as one would expect that it should do in the pages of such a work. According to the other view, the text of the "Chronicles" calls for emendation.

²¹²³ Hogi-uta no kata-uta. For "Incomplete Song" see Sect. LXXXIX, Note 14.

SECTION CXXIX:—EMPEROR NIN-TOKU (PART X.—A VESSEL IS MADE INTO A LUTE)

In this august reign there was a tall tree on the west of the river Tsuki. ²¹²⁴ The shadow of this tree, on its being struck by the morning sun, reached to the Island of Ahaji: ²¹²⁵ and on its being struck by the evening sun, it crossed Mount Takayasu. ²¹²⁶ So the tree was cut down and made into a vessel, and a very swift-going vessel it was. At the time, this vessel was called by the name of Karanu. ²¹²⁷ So with this vessel the water of the Island of Ahaji was drawn morning and evening, and presented as the great august water. ²¹²⁸ The broken [pieces] of this vessel were used [as fuel] to burn salt and the pieces of wood that remained over from the burning were made into a lute, whose sound re-echoed seven miles ²¹²⁹ [off]. So [some one ²¹³⁰] sang, saying:

"Karanu was burnt [as fuel] for salt; the remainder was made into a lute; oh! when struck, it sounds like the wet plants standing rocked on the reefs in the middle of the harbour, the harbour of Yura." ²¹³¹

This is a Changing Song which is a Quiet song. ²¹³²

²¹²⁴ This is Moribe's reading (given without any comment) of the original characters 免寸. Motowori pronounces them corrupt; but, having no emendation to propose, simply leaves them without any kana reading.

²¹²⁵ See Sect. V, Note 3.

²¹²⁶ Takayasu no yama, in the province of Kahachi. The characters with which the name is written signify "high and easy."

²¹²⁷ The significance of this name, written 枯野, remains obscure notwithstanding the efforts of the commentators to explain it.

²¹²⁸ I.e., this vessel was used to bring over every morning and evening p. 356 the water for the Imperial household, which was drawn on the Island of Ahaji.

²¹³⁰ In the "Chronicles" this story is placed in the reign of the Emperor Ō-jin, and the Song is attributed to that monarch.

²¹³¹ In this Song the sound of the twanging of the lute that had been made from the remnant of the boat Karanu is compared to the rustling of the plants standing half out of water on the reefs in the harbour of Yura.—The compound word kaki-hiku, rendered by "struck," signifies literally "scratched and struck," the lute being struck with the nail. The onomatopoetic word saya-saya, of which "sound" is but a colourless equivalent, represents both the delightful ring of the lute and the rustling of the sea-plants. What plants are intended by the expression "wet plants" (nadzu no ki) is a point that has been much disputed. Moribe even thinks that the term is meant for the name of a particular species of (apparently) coral now found in the island of Hachijo. Yura is in the Island of Ahaji.

²¹³² See Sect. CXXIV, Note 19.

SECTION CXXX.—EMPEROR NIN-TOKU (PART XI.—HIS AGE AND PLACE OF BURIAL)

The august years of this Heavenly Sovereign were eighty-three. His august mausoleum is on the Ear-Moor of Mozu. ²¹³³

²¹³³ Mozu no mimi-hara. The origin of this singular name is thus explained in the "Chronicle" (Emperor Nin-toku, 67th year, Winter, 10th Moon): "(The Emperor made a progress to the moor of Ishidzu in Kafuchi to fix the site of his mausoleum. On the day when the construction of his mausoleum was begun, a deer suddenly ran out from the middle of the moor, rushed into the midst of the coolies, fell down, and p. 357 died. The suddenness of its death causing astonishment, its wound was looked for, whereupon a shrike came out of its ear, and flew away. So on looking into the ear, it was found to be all eaten away. So that is the reason why the place is called Mozu no mimi-hare (the 'Shrike's Ear-Moor.')

SECTION CXXXI.—EMPEROR RI-CHIU (PART I.— GENEALOGIES)

His Augustness Iza-ho-wake dwelt in the palace of Wakasakura at Ihare, ²¹³⁴ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded Her Augustness Princess Kuro, ²¹³⁵ daughter of the Noble of Ashida, ²¹³⁶ child of So-tsu-biko of Kadzuraki, ²¹³⁷ and begot august children: King Oshiha of Ichinobe; ²¹³⁸ next King Mima: ²¹³⁹ next his younger sister Awomi-no-iratsume, ²¹⁴⁰ another name for whom was Ichi-toyo-no-iratsume. ²¹⁴¹

²¹³⁴ For Ihare see Sect. XLIII, Note 26. Waka-sakura signifies "young cherry-tree." The origin of the name is traced, rightly or wrongly, to an incident mentioned in the "Chronicles" under the reign of this Emperor, 3rd year.

²¹³⁵ Kuro-hime i.e., "black princess." The same name occurs several times, and has reference to the black hair of the person so designated.

²¹³⁶ Ashida no sukune. Ashida signifies "reed-moor." It is the name of a place in Yamato.

²¹³⁷ Kadzuraki no So-tsu-biko. For this name, which is here abbreviated, see Sect. LXI, Note 55.

²¹³⁸ Ichinobe no Oshiha no miko. Ichinobe is in the province of Yamashiro, and the name seems to mean "near the market." The name of Oshiha refers to the "uneven teeth" of this personage which are mentioned in Sect. CLXVII (near Note 5).

²¹³⁹ Mima no miko. The signification of this name is quite obscure.

²¹⁴⁰ Awomi no iratsume. Awomi is supposed by Motowori to be the name of a place.

²¹⁴¹ Ihitoyo no iratsume. Ihitoyo is supposed by Motowori to be the name of a bird, perhaps a kind of owl.

SECTION CXXXII.—EMPEROR RI-CHIU (PART II.—HE IS TAKEN TO ISO-NO-KAMI)

Originally, when dwelling at the palace of Naniha, [the Heavenly Sovereign] on holding a copious feast when at the great tasting, ²¹⁴² was intoxicated with the great august liquor, and fell greatly and augustly asleep. Then his younger brother, King Sumi-no-ye-naka-tsu, wishing to take the Heavenly Sovereign, set fire to the great palace. Thereupon the Suzerain of Achi, ²¹⁴³ ancestor of the Suzerains of Aya ²¹⁴⁴ in Yamato, having taken him away by stealth, set him on an august horse, and caused him to make a progress into Yamato. So [the Heavenly Sovereign] awoke on reaching the moor of Tajihi, ²¹⁴⁵ and said: "What place is this?" Then the Suzerain of Achi said: "King Sumi-no-ye-no-naka-tsu set fire to the great palace; so I am fleeing with thee into Yamato." Then the Sovereign sang, saying:

"Had I known that I should sleep on the Moor of Tajihi, oh! I would have brought my dividing matting, had I known that I should sleep!" ²¹⁴⁶

On reaching the Pass of Hanifu ²¹⁴⁷ and gazing at the palace of Naniha, the fire was still bright. Then the Heavenly Sovereign sang again, saying:

"The group of houses sparkingly burning, as I stand and look from the Pass of Hanifu, is in the direction of the house of my spouse." ²¹⁴⁸

So when they reached the entrance of the Ohosaka mountain, ²¹⁴⁹ they met one woman. This woman said: "A number of men bearing weapons are barring [the way across] the mountain. Thou shouldst cross it going round by way of Tagima. ²¹⁵⁰ Then the Heavenly Sovereign sang, saying:

"Oh! on asking the way of the maiden we met at Ohosaka, she tells not [the] direct [way], but tells of the Tagima way." ²¹⁵¹

²¹⁴² I.e., on the occasion of his performing the religious ceremony of tasting the first rice of the season.

²¹⁴³ Achi no atahe, supposed to be of Korean origin, and to be a descendant of 阿知, great grandson of the Chinese Emperor 靈帝.

²¹⁴⁴ Aya no atahe. This family was of continental origin, Aya being the Japanese reading of the character 漢; see Sect. CXI, Note 2.

²¹⁴⁵ Tajihi no nu, in the provinces of Kahachi. The signification of the name is obscure.

²¹⁴⁶ This Song expresses the Monarch's regret at not having brought his mats with him.—From the expression used in the text (tatsu-gomo), the commentators suppose that such mats were used as a sort of screen to avert draughts. One proposal is to consider tatsu as the Verb tatsuru, "to set up," because these mats must have been "set up" round the room. But it agrees better with grammatical usage to take it in its other sense of "cutting," or "dividing," and to suppose that the mats were so called because they "cut off" the draught from the person sitting behind them.

²¹⁴⁷ Or "Hill of Hanifu," Hanifu-zaka, in the province of Kahachi.

²¹⁴⁸ The meaning of this Song is perfectly clear.

²¹⁴⁹ See Sect. LXIV, Note 25. The word rendered "entrance" here and below in the same context is literally "mouth."

²¹⁵⁰ See Sect. LXII, Note 49.

²¹⁵¹ Moribe thus paraphrases this Song: "If the maiden whom I met at Ohosaka and whom I sought direction of had been a common mortal, she would have simply told me the shortest road. But now I see why it was that

So making his progress up, he dwelt in the temple of the Deity of Isonokami. ²¹⁵²

she bid me go round by way of Tagima: it was to preserve me from danger. Ah! she must have been a Goddess."—The p. 360 words tada ni generally have the sense of "directly," "immediately," and are indeed here so understood by Motowori. Moribe's interpretation, which has been followed by the translator, does but little violence to the text, and suits the general meaning better.

²¹⁵² See Sect. XLV, Note 16.

SECTION CXXXIII.—EMPEROR RI-CHIU (PART III.—HIS REBELLIOUS BROTHER AND THE LATTER'S RETAINER SOBAKARI ARE SLAIN)

Thereupon his younger brother His Augustness Midzu-ha-wake came, and sent [to ask for] an audience. ²¹⁵³ Then the Heavenly Sovereign caused him to be told [these words]: As I am in doubt whether perhaps Thine Augustness may [not] be of like mind ²¹⁵⁴ with King Sumi-no-ye-no-naka-tsu, I will not meet and speak with thee." [His Augustness Midzu-ha-wake] replied, saying: "I have no evil intent. I am not of like mind with King Sumi-no-ye-no-naka-tsu." [The Heavenly Sovereign] again caused him to be told [these words]: "If that be so, [do thou] now return down, and slay King Sumi-no-ye-no-naka-tsu, and come up [again hither]. At that time I will surely meet and speak with thee." So he forthwith returned down to Naniha, and deceived [a man] named Sobakari, ²¹⁵⁵ a man-at-arms ²¹⁵⁶ in the personal service of ²¹⁵⁷ King Sumi-no-ye-no-naka-tsu, saying: "If thou wilt obey my words, I shall become Heavenly Sovereign, and will make thee prime Minister, to rule the Empire. ²¹⁵⁸ How [would this be]?" Sobakari replied, saying "" [I will do] according to thy command." Then plenteously endowing that man-at-arms, he said: "If that be so, slay the King." Thereupon Sobakari watched for the time when his King went into the privy, and thrust him to death with a spear. So when [His Augustness Midzu-ha-wake] was making his progress to Yamato taking Sobakari with him, he, on reaching the entrance of the Ohosaka mountain, thought [thus]: "Although Sobakari deserves very well of me, he has truly ²¹⁵⁹ slain his lord. This is unrighteous. Nevertheless if I reward not his deed, I may be called untruthful; and if I quite carry out my promise, his intentions are on the contrary to be feared. So, though recompensing his deed, I will destroy his actual person." Therefore he said to Sobakari: "I will halt here to-day and bestow on thee the rank of Prime Minister, and to-morrow will [continue my] progress up." So a halt was made at the entrance to the mountain, a temporary palace forthwith built, a copious feast ²¹⁶⁰ suddenly held, the rank of Prime Minister forthwith bestowed on the man-at-arms, and all the officials ²¹⁶¹ made to do obeisance [to him]. The man-at-arms, delighted, thought that he had accomplished his design. Then [His Augustness Midzu-ha-wake] said to the man-at-arms: "To-day I will drink liquor from the same cup as the Prime Minister." And when they drank together, a bowls large [enough] to hide the face was filled with the liquor presented. ²¹⁶² Hereupon the King's child drank first, and the man-at-arms drank afterwards. So when the man-at-arms was drinking, the great cup covered his face. Then [His Augustness Midzu-ha-²¹⁵³ The original of this clause is very elliptical, consisting only of the two characters 令謁. The old reading joins thereto the characters 爾天皇, which according to Motowori form the commencement of the next sentence. The meaning is not affected by the change.

²¹⁵⁴ Literally, "heart." Similarly below, where the word "intent" is used in the translation.

²¹⁵⁵ The signification of this name is quite obscure.

²¹⁵⁶ Hayabito. The reader should compare Section XXXVIII. Note 11.

²¹⁵⁷ Literally, "closely accustomed to."

²¹⁵⁸ The original leaves it uncertain whether the words "to rule the Empire" should be applied to the speaker, to Sobakari, or to both; and the ambiguous application has therefore been preserved in the translation.

²¹⁵⁹ Literally, "already."

²¹⁶⁰ See Sect. CVII, Note 7.

²¹⁶¹ Literally, "the hundred officials," a Chinese phrase, which has been met with before.

²¹⁶² The character 碗 used in the text implies by its radical that the bowl was of metal. It is an unauthorized form of 碗 or 盃.

wake] drew forth a sabre which he had laid under the matting, and cut off the head of the man-at-arms. Forthwith on the morrow he made his progress up. So the place was called by the name of Chika-tsu-Asuka. ²¹⁶³ Going up and reaching Yamato, he said: "I will halt here to-day and, having purified myself, will go forth to-morrow and worship at the temple of the Deity." ²¹⁶⁴ So that place is called by the name of Toho-tsu-Asuka. ²¹⁶⁵ So going forth to the temple of the Deity of Iso-no-kami ²¹⁶⁶, he sent to report to the Heavenly Sovereign that he had come up to serve him after accomplishing the work [with which he had been entrusted]. ²¹⁶⁷ So [the Heavenly Sovereign] sent for, and met, and spoke with him.

²¹⁶³ Scil. by the prince to the man-at-arms.

²¹⁶⁴ I.e., Nearer Asuka. The name is written 近飛鳥. The student should consult Motowori's note on this passage in Vol. XXXVIII, pp. 38-39 of his Commentary, to see what can be done towards reconciling the name, the characters it is written with, and the origin ascribed to it, all of which are so apparently incongruous.

²¹⁶⁵ 遠飛鳥, i.e., Further Asuka. Conf. Note.

²¹⁶⁶ Scil. of Isonokami. This deity was the sword forming the subject of the legend narrated in Sect. XLV.

²¹⁶⁷ This is the gist of the original phrase, which will not bear literal translation into English: 政既平詔參上侍之.

SECTION CXXXIV.—EMPEROR RI-CHIU (PART IV.—VARIOUS DEEDS)

The Heavenly Sovereign thereupon first appointed the Suzerain of Achi to the office of Treasurer, ²¹⁶⁸ and likewise bestowed on him domains. ²¹⁶⁹ Again in this august reign the name of Waka-sakura Tribe ²¹⁷⁰ was granted to the Grandees of the Waka-sakura Tribe. ²¹⁷¹ Again the gentile name ²¹⁷² of Dukes of Himeda ²¹⁷³ was granted to the Dukes of Himeda. Again the Ihare Clan ²¹⁷⁴ was established.

²¹⁶⁸ In Japanese the same word is used for a "store-house" and for the "treasury." But the appointment here mentioned would seem really to correspond to what we should call Lord of the Treasury or Minister of Finance. The characters in the original are 藏官.

²¹⁶⁹ Literally, "ration grounds."

²¹⁷⁰ Waka-sakura-be.

²¹⁷¹ Waka-sakura-be no omi. Conf. Sect. CXXXI, Note 1.

²¹⁷² All the editors agree in here reading as kabane ("gentile name," see Sect. XIV, Note 5) the character 姓, which signifies properly "family name."

²¹⁷³ Himeda no kimi. Nothing is known of this family.

²¹⁷⁴ Ihare-be. For Ihare see Sect. XLIII, Note 6. It will be remembered that the Emperor of whose reign the present Section forms part held his court at Ihare.

SECTION CXXXV.—EMPEROR RI-CHIU (PART V.—HIS AGE AND PLACE OF BURIAL)

The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were sixty-four. His august mausoleum is at Mozu.²¹⁷⁵

²¹⁷⁵ See Sect. CXXX, Note 1.

SECTION CXXXVI.—EMPEROR HAN-ZEI

His Augustness Midzu-ha-wake dwelt in the palace of Shibakaki at Tajihi, ²¹⁷⁶ and ruled the Empire. The length of this Heavenly sovereign's august person was nine feet two inches and a half. ²¹⁷⁷ The length of his august teeth was one inch, and their breadth two lines, and the upper and lower [row] corresponded exactly, [like jewels strung together]. The Heavenly Sovereign wedded the Lady of Tsunu, ²¹⁷⁸ daughter of Kogoto, Grandee of Wani, ²¹⁷⁹ and begot august children: the Lady of Kahi; ²¹⁸⁰ next the Lady of Tsubura ²¹⁸¹ (two Deities). Again he wedded Oto-hime, ²¹⁸² daughter of the same Grandee, and begot august children: King Takara; ²¹⁸³ next the Lady of Takabe. ²¹⁸⁴—altogether four Kings [and Queens]. ²¹⁸⁵ The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were sixty. His august mausoleum is on the Moor of Mozu. ²¹⁸⁶

²¹⁷⁶ For Tajihi see Sect. CXXXII, Note 4. Shiba-kaki (or Shiba-gaki) signifies "a fence of brushwood."

²¹⁷⁷ As to the ancient Japanese measures we have no accurate information, and the English equivalents used in this passage correspond but approximately to the modern Japanese standards. The character rendered "line" is 分, which denotes the tenth part of a 寸 or "inch." Motowori remarks that the dimensions of the teeth are not anything extraordinary p. 365 judged by the present standard, and suppose that anciently the measures of length must have been smaller than at present.

²¹⁷⁸ Tsunu no iratsume. The signification of this name is obscure.

²¹⁷⁹ Wani no kogoto no omi. The meaning of Kogoto is obscure, Wani has already often appeared.

²¹⁸⁰ Kahi no iratsume. Kahi is the name of a province, but it cannot be said for certain that it is from it that this Princess derived her name.

²¹⁸¹ Tsubura no iratsume. The meaning of Tsubura is obscure.

²¹⁸² I.e., "the younger princess."

²¹⁸³ Takara no miko. Takara signifies "treasure."

²¹⁸⁴ Takabe no iratsume. Takabe seems to be the name of a place unless it be considered to be connected with the word taka, "hawk."

²¹⁸⁵ Remember that the single character 王 includes both sexes.

²¹⁸⁶ See Sect. CXXX. Note 1.

SECTION CXXXVII.—EMPEROR IN-GIYŌ²¹⁸⁷ (PART I— GENEALOGIES)

His Augustness Wo-asa-dzu-ma-waku-go-no-sukune dwelt in the Palace of Toho-tsu-Asuka, ²¹⁸⁸ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign wedded Her Augustness Osaka-no-oho-naka-tsu-hime, ²¹⁸⁹ younger sister of King Oho-hodo, and begot august children: King Karu of Kinashi; ²¹⁹⁰ next Nagata-no-oho-iratsume; ²¹⁹¹ next King Kurohiko of Sakahi; ²¹⁹² next His Augustness Anaho; ²¹⁹³ next Karu-no-oho-iratsume ²¹⁹⁴ another name for whom is Sotohoshi-no-iratsume. ²¹⁹⁵ (the reason for her being given the august name of Queen So-tohoshi was that the refulgence of her person passed through her garments); next King Shiro-biko of Yatsuri; ²¹⁹⁶ next His Augustness Oho-hatsuse: ²¹⁹⁷ (nine Deities). Altogether the Heavenly Sovereign's august children [numbered] nine Deities—(five Kings and four Queens). Of these nine Kings and Queens, His Augustness Anaho ²¹⁹⁸ [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire. Next his Augustness Oho-hatsuse ²¹⁹⁹ ruled the Empire.

²¹⁸⁷ Also pronounced In-kiyo.

²¹⁸⁸ See Sect. CXXXIII, Note 13.

²¹⁸⁹ This name and the next have already appeared in Sect. CXVII.

²¹⁹⁰ Kinashi no Karu no miko. Karu is properly the name of a place in Yamato which has already often appeared in the text. It is uncertain whether kinashi is likewise the name of a place or of a particular kind of pear; but Motowori inclines to the former view.

²¹⁹¹ I.e., "the great lord of Negate." There are many places of this name (lit. "long rice-field"), and it is not known which is here intended.

²¹⁹² I.e., "the black prince of Sakahi." The latter word signifies "frontier." It is not known where Sakahi is, neither is the reason for the name of "black prince" applied to this personage known (Conf. the "white prince" mentioned a little further on).

²¹⁹³ Or, "of Anaho," for Anaho is properly the name of a place in Yamato. Its import is not clear.

²¹⁹⁴ I.e., "the great lady of Karu."

²¹⁹⁵ Written 衣通郎女, i.e., "the garment-passing lady." So-tohoshi is Motowori's reading of the characters, the usual reading being So-tohori (the Intransitive instead of the Transitive form of the Verb). He likewise identifies Koto-fushi (see Sect. CXVII, Note 9) with this celebrated princess, who is commonly worshipped as Goddess of Poetry. There is much confusion in the traditions concerning her, and Motowori's notes on the subject in Vol. XXXIV, pp. 53-54 and in Vol. XXXIX of his Commentary, p. 3, should be consulted.

²¹⁹⁶ Yatsuri no shiro-bike no miko, i.e., "the white prince of Yatsuri." Yatsuri is the name of a place in Yamato. It is written with characters signifying "eight melons."

²¹⁹⁷ I.e., "great Hatsuse," so called from Hatsuse, a celebrated place in Yamato, which has already been mentioned.

²¹⁹⁸ I.e. "the great lady of Tachibana," the latter being the name of a place in Yamato. The word signifies "orange."

²¹⁹⁹ I.e., "the lady of Sakami," the latter being apparently the name of a place either in Harima or in Wohari. Its derivation is not clear.

SECTION CXXXVIII.—EMPEROR IN-GIYŌ (PART II.—HIS SICKNESS IS CURED BY A KOREAN PHYSICIAN)

The Heavenly Sovereign, when first about to rule the succession of Heaven's Sun, ²²⁰⁰ declined, saying: "I have a long sickness; I cannot rule the sun's succession." Nevertheless, as from the Empress downwards all the magnates strongly urged him, he forthwith ruled the Empire. At this time the ruler of Shiragi ²²⁰¹ dutifully sent eighty-one vessels with august tribute. Then the chief envoy ²²⁰² sent with the august tribute, whose name was Komu-ha-chimu-kamu-ki-mu, ²²⁰³ was a man deeply versed in the medical art. So he cured the Heavenly Sovereign's august sickness.

²²⁰⁰ For this expression see Sect. XXXIII, Note 27. The story of the refusal of this monarch to accept the crown which was offered to him by the magnates of the nation is told at considerable length in the parallel passage of the "Chronicles." According to the same authority he belonged to a collateral branch of the Imperial family, and was therefore not in the regular line of succession.

²²⁰¹ See Sect. XCVIII. Note 2.

²²⁰² Literally, "great messenger."

²²⁰³ 金波鎮漢紀武 Motowori decides that 金 is the surname, 波鎮 an official title, 漢紀 an official designation of the kinsmen of the Korean King, and 武 the personal name.

SECTION CXXXIX.—EMPEROR IN-GIYŌ (PART III. HE RECTIFIES THE PEOPLE'S NAMES)

Thereupon the Heavenly Sovereign, lamenting the transgressions in the surnames and gentile names of the people of all the surnames and names in the Empire ²²⁰⁴ placed jars [for trial by] hot water ²²⁰⁵ at the Wondrous Cape of Eighty Evils in Words at Amakashi, ²²⁰⁶ and deigned to establish the surnames and gentile names of the eighty heads of companies. ²²⁰⁷ Again the Karu Tribe ²²⁰⁸ was established as the august proxy of King Karu of Ki-nashi; the Osaka Tribe ²²⁰⁹ was established as the Empress's august proxy; and the Kaha Tribe ²²¹⁰ was established as the august proxy of the Empress's younger sister Ta-wi no Naka-tsu-hime. ²²¹¹

²²⁰⁴ The original is; 天下氏氏名名人等之氏姓, which Motowori reads ame no shita no uji-uji na-na no hito domo no uji kabane.

²²⁰⁵ We learn from the "Chronicles" that he whose hand was injured in the process of dipping it into the jar of boiling water was pronounced a deceiver, while those who stood the trial unhurt were considered to be telling the truth.

²²⁰⁶ Amakashi no koio-yo-maga-tsu-hi no saki. Motowori truly observes that this does not sound like an actual geographical name, but was rather, it may be supposed, a new designation given to Cape Amakashi (see Sect. LXXII, Note 10) on account of the incident here mentioned. The name reminds us of that of one of the deities born from the purification of the person of the creator Izanagi after his return from Hades (see X, Note 14).

²²⁰⁷ Ya-sotomo-no-wo. See Sect. XXXIII, Note 19.

²²⁰⁸ Karu-be.

²²⁰⁹ Osaka-be, so called after the Empress's native place (See Sect. CXXXVII, Note 3, and Sect. CXVII, Note 6).

The reading of Osaka-be is given in all the editions to the characters in the text, 刑武, where we should expect 忽坂部. Motowori's explanation of the reason why the name was thus written will be found in Vol. XXXIX, p. 19, of his Commentary.

²²¹⁰ Kaha-be. Motowori supposes that there is here some corruption of the text, as no connection can be discovered between the name of this Tribe and that of the Princess whose proxy the tribe became.

²²¹¹ See Sect. CXVII, Note 7.

SECTION CXL. EMPEROR IN-GIYŌ (PART IV.—HIS AGE AND PLACE OF BURIAL)

The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were seventy-eight. His august mausoleum is at Naga-ye near Wega in Kafuchi. ²²¹²

²²¹² See Sect. CIII, Note 2 and 3.

SECTION CXLI.—EMPEROR IN-GIYŌ (PART V.—PRINCE KARU LOVES HIS SISTER PRINCESS SO-TOHOSHI)

After the decease of the Heavenly Sovereign, it was settled that King Karu of Ki-nashi should rule the Sun's succession. ²²¹³ But in the interval before his accession, he debauched his younger sister the Great Lady of Karu, and sang, saying:

"Making rice-fields on the mountain, making hidden conduits run on account of the mountain's height:—to-day indeed [my] body easily touches the younger sister whom I wooed with a hidden wooing, the spouse for whom I wept with a hidden weeping." ²²¹⁴

This is a Hind-Lifting Song. ²²¹⁵ Again he sang, saying:

"The rattle-rattle of the hail against the bamboo-grass:—After I shall have certainly slept, what though I be plotted against by people! When I shall have slept delightfully, if there is the disorder of the cut Hydropyrum latifolium, let there be disorder,—when I shall have slept a good sleep!" ²²¹⁶

This is a Rustic Lifting Song. ²²¹⁷

²²¹³ See Sect. XXXII. Note 27. The wording of this sentence would make it appear that it was only after the Emperor In-giyo's death that King Karu was chosen to succeed him. But probably King Karu had been appointed Heir Apparent (皇太子) during his Father's life time, as is indeed expressly stated in the "Chronicles," and is implied in later passages of this work; and what our author meant to say was: "It was settled that King Karu should rule the Empire after the former Sovereign's decease." etc.

²²¹⁴ The meaning of the Song is: "The sister, the mistress, whom I wooed with such difficulty, is now easily mine."—The first phrase, down to "mountain's height," is but a "Preface" to the poem properly so called, serving to introduce by a jeu-de-mots the word shita-dohi, which means not only "hidden conduit," but "hidden wooing." At the same time the implied comparison of the poet's secret love of one so difficult to obtain as his own sister, to the course of the water in hidden conduits which is carried up the mountain's side to irrigate a field perched in a spot almost inaccessible, is by no means devoid of aptness. The word "mountain" (yama) is in the original preceded by the Pillow-Word ashihiki (or askiki) no, whose signification is obscure and much disputed.

²²¹⁵ Shirage-uta (written phonetically). The interpretation of the term here adopted is that which has the sanction of Motowori and Moribe. They explain it to signify that the voice rose gradually toward the latter part of the Song.

²²¹⁶ As in the case of the preceding Song, the first phrase is but a Preface, which plays on the coincidence in sound between the words tashi-dashi, "rattling," and tashika, "certainly," i.e. "undisturbedly." The signification of the Song proper is: "If I shall but have gratified my passion, what care I however men may plot against me? If I can but press my beloved to my bosom, let all things go to rack and ruin, like the Hydropyrum latifolium, a grass which, when cut, falls into disorder!"—Of the sentiment of the Song, the less said the better; but viewed simply from a literary point of view, it is certainly one of the most fascinating little productions of the early Japanese muse, and the literal rendering of it into English does it woful injustice. Moribe rightly rejects Motowori's proposal to divide the poem in two after the words hito hakayu to mo, "plotted against by people." Kari-komo no, "of the Hydropyrum latifolium," is a Pillow-Word.

²²¹⁷ Hinaburi no ageuta. The commentators have nothing more precise to tell us concerning the expression "Lifting-Song" than that "it refers to the lifting of the voice in singing."

SECTION CXLII.—EMPEROR IN-GIYŌ (PART VI.—WAR BETWEEN PRINCE KARU AND PRINCE ANAHO)

Therefore all the officials ²²¹⁸ and likewise the people of the Empire turned against the Heir Apparent Karu, and towards the August Child Anaho. Then the Heir Apparent Karu, being alarmed, fled into the house of the Grandee the Noble Oho-mahe Wo-mahe, ²²¹⁹ and made a provision of implements of war. (The arrows made at this time ²²²⁰ were provided with copper arrow-insides: ²²²¹ so those arrows are called by the name of Karu arrows.) Prince Anaho likewise made implements of war. (The arrows made by this Prince were just the arrows of the present time: ²²²² they are called Anaho arrows.) Thereupon Anaho raised an army, and beleaguered the house of the noble Oho-make Wo-mahe. Then, when he reached the gate, heavy ice-rain ²²²³ was falling. So he sang, saying:

"Come thus under cover of the metal gate of the Noble Oho-mahe Wo-mahe! We will stand till the rain stops." ²²²⁴

Then the Noble Oho-mahe came singing, lifting his hands, striking his knees, dancing, and waving his arms. The Song said:

"The courtiers are tumultuous, [saying] that the small bell of the garter of the courtiers has fallen off. Country-people, too, beware!" ²²²⁵

²²¹⁸ See Sect. CXII, Note 4.

²²¹⁹ Oho-mahe Wo-make sukune no omi (according to the old reading Oho-saki Wo-saki, etc. Motowori considers this double name to denote two brothers, the words oho and wo ("great" and "small") naturally lending themselves to the interpretation of "elder" and "younger." Moribe, on the contrary, thinks that there was but one, and is supported both by the authority of the "Chronicles of Japan" and by the fact that, except in the "Chronicles of Old Matters of Former Ages," which is believed to be a forgery, no second brother is anywhere mentioned. He explains the use of the double name in the prose text as having crept in through the influence of the text of the following Song (see Note 7 below). This seems to the translator the better view.

²²²⁰ I.e., "on this occasion."

²²²¹ There is here an evident corruption of the text, and Motowori aptly conjectures that arrow-heads, or, as they are called in Japanese, arrow-points, are intended. He adds that up till then arrow-heads had always been made of iron.

²²²² The author's style is here rather at fault; for he apparently wishes to say that the arrows employed by Prince Anaho were those which had been used in ancient times and were still the most universally employed—that, in fact, they were the usual style of arrow in contradistinction to those of Prince Karu's invention.

²²²³ See Sect. LXXXVIII, Note 5.

²²²⁴ The prince, in this Song, bids his troops follow his example, and take refuge from the rain under cover of the gate of Oho-mahe's house. Such, at least, is the actual sense of the words used; but Motowori sees in them nothing less than a slightly veiled exhortation to his followers to attack the castle, while Moribe, on the other hand, thinks they were meant to convey to Oho-mahe a hint of his presence, and enable the beleaguered prince, for whom (as being his elder brother) Prince Anaho retained a great affection and respect, to devise some method of escape. This seems extremely far-fetched.—The word "metal" probably refers only to the fastenings of the gate, and not to its whole structure.

²²²⁵ The exact purport and application of this Song is disputed, but this much seems clear: that the composer of it seeks to quiet both the besieging army (out of politeness called courtiers), and the peasants who had joined the fray, by making light of the whole occurrence, which he compares to so trivial an accident as the falling of a bell from a man's "garter" or "leggings." The custom of ornamenting this article of dress with a small bell is, however, not mentioned elsewhere. The word yume, which concludes the Song and is here rendered

This Song is of a Courtier's Style. ²²²⁶ Singing thus, he came near and said: "August Child of our Heavenly Sovereign! Come not with arms against the King thine elder brother. If thou shouldst come against him with arms, people will surely laugh. I ²²²⁷ will secure him and present him to thee." ²²²⁸ The Prince Anaho disbanded his troops and went away. So the Noble Oho-make Wo-mahe secured Prince Karu, and led him forth, and presented him [to Prince Anaho]. The captive Prince sang, saying:

"Maiden of heaven-soaring Karu! if thou cry violently, people will know. Cry quietly like the doves on Mount Hasa." ²²²⁹

Again he sang:

"Maiden of heaven-soaring Karu! Come and sleep, and [then] pass on, oh maiden of Karu!" ²²³⁰

"beware," is identified by Motowori and Moribe with the Imperative of the Verbiwu "to avoid," "to shun," "not to do."

²²²⁶ Miya-hito-buri. This is one of the cases which lend support to Motowori's view that the names of the so called styles of Songs are derived from their initial words.

²²²⁷ Written with the humble character 僕, "servant."

²²²⁸ The word used in the text, here and also in the next sentence, is that which properly denotes the presenting of tribute.

²²²⁹ Another reading gives this sense:

"As, if the maiden of heaven-soaring Karu cried violently, people would know, she cries quietly like the doves on Mount Hasa."

[paragraph continues] According to this reading, the poet simply explains the reason of the undemonstrativeness of his mistress's grief; according to that in the text, he implores her not to weep too passionately.—Amadamu or amadamu ya, "heaven-soaring," is the Pillow-Word for Karu, applied to it punningly on account of its similarity in sound to the word kari, "a wild. goose," which well deserves the epithet "heaven-soaring." Of Mount Hasa nothing is known.

²²³⁰ Rendered thus according to Moribe's exegesis, which quite approves itself to the translator's mind, this Song signifies: "Oh! maiden of Karu! come and sleep with me but once, before my impending banishment renders it hard for us to meet again." Motowori chooses to interpret nete as a crasis of nayete, "bending." and sees in the Song an invitation to the maiden to come quietly so as not to attract observation.—The final word, translated "maiden," is wotome-domo, properly a Plural, but here used in a Singular sense, as watakuski-domo, "I" (properly "we"), so constantly is in the modern Colloquial Dialect. For the Pillow-Word "heaven-soaring" see preceding Note.

SECTION CXLIII.—EMPEROR IN-GIYŌ (PART VII.— DEATH OF PRINCE KARU AND PRINCESS SO-TOHOSHI)

So Prince Karu was banished to the hot waters of Iyo. ²²³¹ Again when about to be banished, he sang saying:

"The heaven-soaring birds, too, are indeed messengers. When thou hearest the voice of the crane, ask my name." ²²³²

These three songs are of a Heaven-Soaring style. ²²³³ Again he sang, saying:

"If they banish the Great Lord to an island, he will indeed make the remaining return voyage. Beware of my mat! Mat indeed in words,—beware of my spouse! ²²³⁴

This Song is of a Partly Lowered Rustic style. ²²³⁵ Queen So-tohoshi presented a Song [to him]. That Song said:

"Let not thy feet tread on the oyster-shells of the shore of Ahine with its summer herbs! Pass there [after] having made clear!" ²²³⁶

So when afterwards again, being unable to restrain her love, she went after him, she sang, saying:

²²³¹ For Iyo see Sect. V, Note 4. Its hot springs are often mentioned in early documents. Motowori identifies them with a place now called Dō-go (道後).

²²³² The meaning of this Song is: "I go where perchance no messengers will reach me. But thou must ask tidings of me from the birds."

²²³³ Ama-da-buri. The title seems to be derived from the initial Pillow-Word of these three Songs.

²²³⁴ The meaning of this Song seems to the translator to be: "Even if they dare to banish me now, I shall some day return again. Respect my mat during my absence. Mat, indeed! It is my wife that must be respected." The commentators consider the concluding words to be a command addressed to the wife, and interpret the phrase to mean, "My spouse, beware! "But surely this makes less good sense, and moreover fails to suit the exactly parallel passage in the first Song of Sect. CXXV. By the words "Great Lord" the princely poet denotes himself,—perhaps with a touch of anger at the indignity to which he is subjected. The difficult expression funa-amari is here, in accordance with Moribe's view rendered by the words "remaining voyage," i.e., "the voyage homeward," which is that part of a voyage that may be said to remain over for an outward-bound vessel when she has reached her destination. Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XXXIX, pp. 50-51, should be consulted for older views of the meaning of the term. The expression "beware of my mat" reminds us that in early days the entire floor of a Japanese room was not matted according to the modern custom, but that each individual had his own mat on which to sit and sleep. Great care was always taken not to defile another's mat, Conf, an elegy from the "Collection of a Myriad Leaves" translated by the present writer in his "Classical Poetry of the Japanese," p. 79.

²²³⁵ Hina-buri no kata-oroshi. Like most of the names of styles of Songs, this one is extremely obscure. The commentators suppose that one part was sung in a lower voice than the rest. But they are merely guessing.

²²³⁶ The actual words of the Song signify: "Lacerate not thy feet by walking on the unseen oyster-shells of the shore of Ahine that is covered with the summer herbs; but walk there after dawn." (This is Keichiū's interpretation of the word akashite, "having made clear," and is the best in the present writer's opinion; the latter commentators see in it a recommendation to the exiled prince to clear the grass away on either side.) The word Ahine calls, however, for special explanation in order that the full import of the poem may be brought out. It properly signifies "sleeping together" or "lying on each other," and is therefore applicable either to the two spouses or to the summer grass. Indeed it is doubtful if it be the name of any real place at all. The word natsu-kusa may also be taken simply as a Pillow-Word for Ahine.—The total gist of the Song is in any case a warning from the maiden to her lover to guard himself against the perils of the journey.

"Thy going has become long past. I will go, oh! to meet thee. Wait! I can not wait." (What is here called yama-tadzu is [what is] now [known by the name of] tatsuge.) ²²³⁷

So when in her pursuit she reached [the place where Prince Karu was, he, who had been] pensively waiting, sang, saying:

"Alas! beloved spouse, who settledst the whereabouts of our grave, setting up flags in the great vale, setting up flags in the little vale of Hatsuse the hidden castle! Alas! beloved spouse, whom I see after [our many troubles], prostrate like a tsuki bow, standing like an adzusa bow!" ²²³⁸

Again he sang, saying:

"Driving sacred piles in the upper reach, driving true piles in the lower reach of the river of secluded Hatsuse, and hanging on the sacrificial piles a mirror, bunging on the true piles true jewels:—if they said that the younger sister whom I love like a true jewel, that the spouse whom I love like a mirror were [there], I would go home, I would long for my country." ²²³⁹

²²³⁷ The meaning of this Song is: "It is too long since thy departure. I can wait no longer, but will go and meet thee."—The Verb "to meet" (mukahe) is in the original preceded by the Pillow-Word yama-tadzu, which forms the subject of the note appended to the poem by the compiler. The commentators are not agreed as to the precise nature of the instrument intended; but it seems to have been some kind of axe. The cause of its use as a Pillow-Word for "meeting" is equally disputed. It only occurs written phonetically. The term tatsu-ge, by which it is explained in the text, is there written 造木, which does not help us much towards understanding what is meant to be designated.

²²³⁸ So obscure is this Song in the original, that Motowori confesses himself unable to make any sense of it. The translator has adopted Mortise's interpretation, according to which the gist of it is this: "Alas! my dear wife, who wast so willing to be for ever united to me that thou didst even fix on the spot in the funereal vale of Hatsuse where we should one day be buried together! Alas for thee, whom at last I now see again"—In order to arrive at this meaning, Moribe is obliged to prove more less satisfactorily that the thrice repeated word wo signifies "vale" or "mountain-fold" the first two times that it occurs, and "grave" the third, and that komoriku no hatsuse, usually interpreted as secluded "Hatsuse," means "the hidden castle," the "final place," i.e., "the tomb, It is also necessary to suppose, without authority, that the flags mentioned by the poet are meant for funeral flags, and that the words "prostrate like a tsuki bow," etc., which, according to the laws of Japanese construction, precede instead of following the phrase "alas! beloved spouse," etc., are but a Preface for the latter.—It will be seen that the foundation on which Moribe's interpretation rests is slight, and that Motowori was scarcely to be blamed for pronouncing the Song incomprehensible. At the same time the translator has thought it better, by following Moribe, to give some translation of it than to leave the passage blank. With this warning, the student may search for other possible meanings if he pleases.—Hatsuse is a still existent and celebrated place among the mountains of Yamato. The etymology of the name, unless we accept Moribe's mentioned above, is obscure. It is now usually pronounced Hase. The tsuki is said to be almost indistinguishable from the keyaki tree (Zelkova keaki). The adzusa seems to be the Catalpa kaempferi, but some believe it to be the cherry tree.

²²³⁹ The first half of this Song down to the words "hanging on the true piles true jewels" is a Preface for what follows. The signification p. 378 of the rest is: "If my dearly loved sister-wife were still at Hatsuse in Yamato, I would fly to her either in thought or deed; but now that she has followed me into exile, the land of exile is good enough."—Moribe, while allowing the first half of the Song to be a Preface for the rest, contends that it also should be credited with a signification bearing on the subject-matter of the main part of the Song. He supposes, namely, the religious ceremony, whatever it was, of driving piles into the bed or bank of the river and of decorating them with beads and a mirror, to have been one really performed by Princess So-tohoshi to compass her lover's, return. In the translator's opinion, it is more elegant and more in accordance with Archaic usage to consider the Preface as having no special significance or connection (otherwise than verbal) with the rest of the poem. The word i-kuhi or i-guhi, rendered "sacred piles," occasions some difficulty; for it is not certain whether Motowori is right in giving to the initial syllable i the meaning of "sacred." It may be simply what has been termed an "Ornamental Prefix," devoid of meaning. Motowori however points out that this usage of it is restricted to Verbs, and does not occur with Substantives. Komoriku no, the Pillow-Word for Hatsuse, is rendered by "secluded" in accordance with Mabuchi's usually accepted derivation from komori-kuni, "retired land." Moribe, notwithstanding what he has said in his exegesis of the preceding poem (Note 8), is willing to allow that, though perhaps not its original, this was its common, meaning even in ancient times.

Having thus sung, they forthwith killed themselves together. ²²⁴⁰ So these two songs are Reading Songs. ²²⁴¹

²²⁴⁰ I.e., committed suicide together.

²²⁴¹ This expression is interpreted to mean that these Songs were recited in monotone, as one would read a book or tell a tale.

SECTION CXLIV.—EMPEROR AN-KŌ (PART I.—HE SLAYS KING OHO-KUSAKA)

The august child ²²⁴² Anaho dwelt at the palace of Anaho at Isonokami, ²²⁴³ and ruled the Empire. The Heavenly Sovereign sent the Grandee of Ne, ²²⁴⁴ ancestor of the Grandees of Sakamoto, to the residence of King Oho-kusaka, on behalf of his younger brother Prince Oho-hatsuse to command thus: "I wish Thine Augustness's younger sister Queen Waka-kusaka to wed Prince Oho-hatsuse. So do thou present her." ²²⁴⁵ Then King Oho-kusaka did obeisance four times, and said: "Owing to a supposition that there might be some such Great Commands, I have kept her always indoor. ²²⁴⁶ With reverence ²²⁴⁷ will I respectfully offer her according to the Great Commands." Nevertheless, thinking it disrespectful [merely] to send a message, ²²⁴⁸ he forthwith, as a ceremonial gift ²²⁴⁹ from his younger sister, made [the Grandee of Ne] take a pushwood jewel head-dress ²²⁵⁰ to present [to the Heavenly Sovereign]. The Grandee of Ne forthwith stole the jewel headdress meant as a ceremonial gift, and slandered King Oho-kusaka, saying: "King Oho-kusaka would not receive the Imperial Commands, but said: "An soror mea fiet ejusdem stirpis [viri] inferior storea?" ²²⁵¹ and, grasping the hilt of his cross-sword, ²²⁵² was angry." So the Heavenly Sovereign, having in his great anger slain King Oho-kusaka, took that King's chief wife Nagata-no-oho-iratsume, ²²⁵³ and made her Empress.

²²⁴² I.e., Prince. In all other cases we find the word mikoto, "Augustness," as the title by which the Sovereign is mentioned at the commencement of his reign.

²²⁴³ See Sect. XLV, Note 16.

²²⁴⁴ Ne no omi. The etymology of ne is obscure.

²²⁴⁵ Literally, as "tribute."

²²⁴⁶ More literally, "I have kept her without putting her out of doors."

²²⁴⁷ Conf. Sect. IX, Note 4 and Sect. XVIII, Note 14.

²²⁴⁸ Motowori surmises that 其 may be an error for 者 in the original of this clause 然言以白事其思无禮.

²²⁴⁹ 禮物. This term corresponds to the modern 結納, the name by which the presents which are exchanged at the time of betrothal are designated.

²²⁵⁰ The original term oshi-ki no tam-akadzura is extremely obscure. One of Motowori's conjectures is that the "push-wood" was a kind of frame by which the jewels or beads, strung on an erect stem of some hard material, were kept firmly attached to the head. Perhaps some notion of the coiffure intended may be gathered from the plate opposite of Part III of Vol. VIII of these "Transactions" (Mr. J. Condor's paper on "The History of Japanese Costume

²²⁵¹ I.e., "An soror mea, cujus pater Imperator Nin-toku, fiet uxor præsensis Imperatoris?" —Hujus similitudinis rusticitas et ipsis Japonicis commentatoribus pudori est.

²²⁵² See Sect. XLV, Note 5.

²²⁵³ See Sect. CXXXVII, Note 5.

SECTION CXLV.—EMPEROR AN-KŌ (PART II.—HE IS SLAIN BY KING MA-YOWA)

After this, the Heavenly Sovereign, being on [his] divine couch, ²²⁵⁴ was sleeping at midday. Then he spoke to his Empress, saying: "Is there anything on thy mind?" She replied, saying: "Being the object of the Heavenly Sovereign's generous favour, what, can there be on my mind?" ²²⁵⁵ Hereupon the Empress's former child, ²²⁵⁶ King Ma-yowa, who was seven years old that year, happened to be just then playing outside the apartment. ²²⁵⁷ Then the Heavenly Sovereign, not knowing that the young King was playing outside the apartment, spoke to the Empress, saying: "I have constantly something upon my mind, namely [the fear] that thy child King Ma-yowa, when he comes to man's estate, may, on learning that I slew the King his father, requite me with a foul heart." ²²⁵⁸ Thereupon King Ma-yowa, who had been playing outside the apartment, and whose ear had caught these words, forthwith watched for the Heavenly Sovereign to be augustly asleep, and, taking the great sword [that lay] by his side, ²²⁵⁹ forthwith struck off the Heavenly Sovereign's head, and fled into the house of the Grandee Tsubura. ²²⁶⁰ The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were fifty-six, His august masoleum is on the mound of Fushimi at Sugahara. ²²⁶¹

²²⁵⁴ Conf. Sect. LXIV, Note 2.

²²⁵⁵ Literally, "Hast thou anything to think about?" The same construction is used in the next sentence.

²²⁵⁶ i.e., her son by her former husband King Oho-kusaka.

²²⁵⁷ Literally, "below the palace." The same expression recurs further on. The parallel passage in the "Chronicles" has "below the upper storey," i.e., in the court or garden of a two-storeyed house. With the small proportions assumed by Japanese architecture, conversation could well be overheard under these conditions.

²²⁵⁸ i.e., "take vengeance upon me."

²²⁵⁹ Scil. by the Emperor's side.

²²⁶⁰ Tsubura omi. The etymology of Tsubura is obscure.

²²⁶¹ For Sugahara see Sect. LXXV, Note I. The Fushimi here mentioned, which is in Yamato, must not be confounded with the better known Fushimi in Yamashiro. The popular etymology of this name (and it is to be found in many books) traces it to Fushi mi, i.e., "lying three," in connection with the story of a man who "lay on the mound for three years." Probably fuse-midzu, "water laid on," a name perhaps given on account of an aqueduct or of water-pipes, was the original designation, which has been corrupted.

SECTION CXLVI.—EMPEROR AN-KŌ (PART III.—PRINCE OHO HATSUSE SLAYS PRINCES KURO-BIKO AND SHIRO-BIRO)

Then Prince Oho-hatsuse, ²²⁶² who at that time was a lad, was forthwith grieved and furious on hearing of this event, and went forthwith to his elder brother King Kurobiko, ²²⁶³ and said: "They have slain ²²⁶⁴ the Heavenly Sovereign. What shall be done?" But King Kurobiko was not startled, and was of unconcerned heart. ²²⁶⁵ There upon King Oho-hatsuse reviled his elder brother, saying: "For one thing it being the Heavenly Sovereign, for another thing it being thy brother, how is thy heart without concern? ²²⁶⁶ What! not startled, but unconcerned on hearing that they have slain thine elder brother!"—and forthwith he clutched him by the collar; dragged him out, drew his sword, and slew him. Again, going to his elder brother King Shiro-biko, he told him the circumstances as before. The unconcernedness again was like [that shown by] King Kuro-biko. [So King Oho-hatsuse,] having forthwith clutched him by the collar, pulled him along, and dug a pit on reaching Woharida, ²²⁶⁷ buried him as he stood, ²²⁶⁸ so that by the time he had been buried up to the loins, both his eyes burst out, and he died. ²²⁶⁹

²²⁶² See Sect. CXXXVII, Note 11.

²²⁶³ See Sect. CXXXVII, Note 6.

²²⁶⁴ Literally, "taken."

²²⁶⁵ I.e., treated the matter with indifference.

²²⁶⁶ Literally, "without relying," as if the speaker meant to say that the dead man could not rely on him for vengeance.

²²⁶⁷ In Yamato. The name seems to mean "new tilled field"

²²⁶⁸ Written 隨立 in the text followed by Motowori. The other reading 墮立 is untenable.

²²⁶⁹ In order to account for such an effect from so apparently insufficient a cause, Motowori supposes that after the prince had been made to stand up to the height of his loins in the pit, the latter was filled by having stones thrown into it, whereby his feet and legs would be crushed.

SECTION CXLVII.—EMPEROR AN-KŌ (PART IV.—DEATH OF PRINCE MA-YOWA AND OF THE GRANDEE TSUBURA)

Again he raised an army and beleaguered the house of the Grandee Tsubura. Then [the other side also] raised an army to resist the attack, ²²⁷⁰ and the arrows that were shot forth were like unto the falling down of the [ears of the] reeds. ²²⁷¹ Thereupon King Oho-hatsuse, using his spear as a staff, peeped in, ²²⁷² and said: "Is perchance the maiden, with whom I spoke, in this house?" ²²⁷³ Then the Grandee Tsubura, hearing these commands, ²²⁷⁴ came forth himself, and having taken off the weapons with which he was girded, did obeisance eight times, and said: "The maiden Princess Kara, whom anon thou deignedst to woo, is at thy service. Again in addition I will present to thee five granaries. (What are called the five granaries are now the gardeners of the five villages of Kadzuraki: ²²⁷⁵) Meanwhile the reason why she does not come out to meet thee in person is that from of old down to the present time grantees and chiefs have been known to hide in the palaces of Kings, but Kings have not yet been known to hide in the houses of grantees. ²²⁷⁶ Therefore I think that, though a vile slave of a grantees ²²⁷⁷ exerting his utmost strength in the fight can scarcely conquer, yet must he die rather than desert a Prince who, trusting in him, has entered into his house." ²²⁷⁸ Having thus spoken, he again took his weapons and went in again to fight. Then, their strength being exhausted and their arrows finished, he said to the Prince: "My ²²⁷⁹ hands are wounded, and our arrows likewise are finished. We cannot now fight. What shall be done?" The Prince replied, saying: "If that be so, there is nothing more to ²²⁷⁰ Literally, "to wait and fight."

²²⁷¹ The character 來, "to come" (here in accordance with English idiom rendered by "down") is supposed to be an error. One conjectural emendation of it, viz., 盛, would suggest the "plentiful" falling of the flowers of the reeds.

²²⁷² I.e., he lifted himself on tiptoe by leaning on his spear, so as to be able to peep in.

²²⁷³ The maiden thus suddenly introduced into the story is Tsubura's daughter Kara, whom it must be supposed that the Prince had previously been wooing.

²²⁷⁴ Or rather, "Imperial words." The application of the characters 詔命 to the words of one who was not yet actually Emperor is curious.

²²⁷⁵ I.e., the places where the five granaries originally were are now the five villages inhabited by the men who cultivate the Imperial gardens. For Kadzuraki see Sect. LV, Note 1.

²²⁷⁶ Or we may, following Motowori's proposal, take the character 臣 in this clause in its slightly different acceptation of "subject," which better suits the sense. The partly phonetic wording of the next sentence 賤奴意富美者 shows how the writer was perplexed by the double use of the term.

²²⁷⁷ Q.d.. in comparison with a prince of the Imperial family, even a grandee was but a vile slave.

²²⁷⁸ The character 隨 in the original of this passage 入坐于隨家 is corrupt. But the sense remains clear, and it is scarcely worth while looking about for a probable emendation. Motowori has no satisfactory proposal to make.

²²⁷⁹ The humble character 僕, "servant" here used for the First Personal pronoun. The expression 僕者手悉傷, here literally rendered "my hands are all wounded," is very curious. Motowori reads it ita-te ohinu, i.e., "I have received (or suffered from) hurtful hands," and compares two somewhat similar expressions found in Sect. XLIV (see Note 33 to that Sect). The translator may however point out that the similarity is much more apparent in Motowori's skana reading than it is in the Chinese text itself. May not the sense of the present passage rather be: "All our men are wounded?" for the word te (手) "hand," is frequently used in Japanese,—in compounds at least,—in the sense of "man," somewhat as it is in English naval, mining, and other technical parlance.

do. [Do thou] now slay me. "So [the Grandee Tsubura] thrust the Prince to death with his sword, and forthwith killed himself by cutting off his own head.

SECTION CXLVIII.—EMPEROR AN-KŌ (PART V:—PRINCE OHO-HATSUSE SLAYS PRINCE OSHIHA)

After this Karu-fukuro, ²²⁸⁰ ancestor of the Dukes of Yama of Sasaki in Afumi, ²²⁸¹ said [to King Oho-hatsuse]: "At Kuta ²²⁸² [and?] on the moor of Kaya at Wata in Afumi, boars and deer are abundant. Their legs as they stand are like a moor [covered] with wogi; ²²⁸³ the horns they point up are like withered trees." At this time [King Oho-hatsuse], taking with him King Ichi-no-be-no-oshiha, made a progress to Afumi, and on reaching this moor, each of them built a separate temporary palace to lodge in. Then next morning, before the sun had risen, King Oshiha with a tranquil heart rode along on his august horse, and, reaching and standing beside King Oho-hatsuse's temporary Palace, said to King Oho-hatsuse's attendants: "Is he not awake yet? He must be told quickly [that I am come]. It is already day-light. ²²⁸⁴ He must come to the hunting-ground,"—and forthwith urging his horse, he went forth. Then the people who served the august person of King Oho-hatsuse said: "As [King Oshiha] is a violent-spoken ²²⁸⁵ Prince, thou shouldst be on thy guard, and likewise it were well to arm thine august person." Forthwith he put on armour underneath his clothes, took and girded on him his bow and arrows, rode off on horseback, and in a sudden interval setting his horse by the side [of the other King's], took out an arrow, shot King Oshiha down, forthwith moreover cut his body [to pieces], put [them] into a horse's manger, and buried them level with the earth.

²²⁸⁰ This name has the curious signification of "Korean (or Chinese) bag."

²²⁸¹ Afumi no Sasaki no yama no kiwi. Conf. Sect. LXIX, Note 46.

²²⁸² This and the following names are altogether obscure, neither is it evident whether two places are meant, or only one. The present passage reads as if two were intended, but a little further down the author seems to be speaking of but one.

²²⁸³ The Hedysarum esculentum.

²²⁸⁴ Literally "the night has already finished dawning."

²²⁸⁵ Motowori endeavours, not every successfully, to explain the use of this epithet by Prince Oho-Hatsuse's attendants. As the sequel shows, the violence was all on the other side.

SECTION CXLIX.—EMPEROR AN-KŌ (PART VI.—FLIGHT OF PRINCES OHOKE AND WOKE)

Hereupon King Ichi-no-be's children ²²⁸⁶ King Ohoke and King Woke (two Deities), having heard of this affray, fled away. So when they reached Karibawi ²²⁸⁷ in Yamashiro and were eating their august provisions, an old man with a tattooed face came and seized the provisions. Then the two Kings said: "We do not grudge the provisions. But who art thou?" He replied, saying: "I am a boar-herd in Yamashiro." So they fled across the River Kusuba, ²²⁸⁸ reached the land of Harima, ²²⁸⁹ entered the house of a native of that country named Shizhimu, ²²⁹⁰ hid their persons, and worked as grooms and cow-herds.

²²⁸⁶ Literally "prince" (王子). Their names apparently signify "big basket" and "little basket."

²²⁸⁷ Known in later times as Kaniha and Kabawi. The name signifies (if the characters with which it is written may be relied on) "the well where the leaves were cut."

²²⁸⁸ See Sect. LXVI. Note 19.

²²⁸⁹ See Sect. LX, Note 19.

²²⁹⁰ Or Shizhimi. Properly the name of a village, it is here used as the name of a man. The etymology is obscure.

SECTION CL.—EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU, (I.—GENEALOGIES)

His Augustness Oho-hatsuse-no-waka-take dwelt in the palace of Asakura at Hatsuse, ²²⁹¹ and ruled the Empire. The Heavenly Sovereign wedded Queen Wake-kusaka-be, younger sister of King Oho-kusaka (no children). Again he wedded Princess Karu, daughter of the Grandee Tsubura, and begot august children: His Augustness Shiraka; next his younger sister Her Augustness Princess Waka-tarashi (two Deities).

²²⁹¹ For Hatsuse see Sect. CXLIII, Note 8. Several Asakuras are named in the pages of these "Records." That here named is in Yamato. The name seems to mean "morning store-house."

SECTION CLI.—EMPEROR YU-RIYAKU (PART II.— VARIOUS DEEDS)

So the Shiraka Clan ²²⁹² was established as the august proxy of Prince Shiraka. Again the Hatsuse-Clan-Retainers ²²⁹³ were established. At this time there came over people from Kure. Again the Kahase Retainers ²²⁹⁴ were established. These people from Kure ²²⁹⁵ were lodged ²²⁹⁶ at Kure-hara. So the place was called by the name of Kure-hara. ²²⁹⁷

²²⁹² Shiraka-be.

²²⁹³ Hatuse-be no tomire. This clan was called after the reigning Emperor. Remember that the word "Retainers" is here a "gentile name."

²²⁹⁴ Kahase no toneri. Kaha-se signifies "river-reach," and the "Chronicles," under date of the eleventh year of this reign, tell a story of the appearance of a white cormorant, to commemorate which this family was established. Cormorants, it will be remembered, were used for catching fish in rivers; hence the appropriateness of the name bestowed on the family in question.

²²⁹⁵ The name given by the early Japanese to Wu (吳), an ancient state in Eastern China to the South of the Yang-tzo River. In Japanese it however, like other names of portions of China, often denotes the whole of that country in a somewhat vague manner. The derivation the word Kura is obscure. The most acceptable proposition is that which would see in it corruption of the original Chinese term Wu, of which Go is the Sinico-Japanese pronunciation. But what of the second syllable re?

²²⁹⁶ The phrase 安置 is in this place used for "lodged."

²²⁹⁷ I.e., Kure Moor. It is in Yamato. According to the "Chronicles," the former name of the place had been Himokuma-nu.

SECTION CLII.—EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU (PART III.—THE ROOF OF THE HOUSE OF THE GREAT DEPARTMENTAL LORD OF SHIKI)

In the beginning, when the Empress ²²⁹⁸ dwelt at Kusaka, ²²⁹⁹ [the Heavenly Sovereign] made a progress in Kafuchi by way of the Tadagoye ²³⁰⁰ road at Kusaka. Then, on climbing to the top of the mountain and gazing on the interior of the country, [he perceived that] there was a house built with a raised roof-frame. ²³⁰¹ The Heavenly Sovereign sent to ask [concerning] that house, saying: "Whose roof with a raised frame is that?" The answer was: "It is the house of the great Departmental Lord of Shiki." ²³⁰² Then the Heavenly Sovereign said: "What! a slave builds his own house in imitation of the august abode of the Heavenly Sovereign!" . . . and forthwith he sent men to burn the house [down], when the Great Departmental Lord, with trembling and dread, bowed his head, ²³⁰³ saying: "Being a slave, I like a slave did not understand, and have built overmuch. I am in great dread." ²³⁰⁴ So the thing that he presented as an august offering [in token] of his entreaty was a white dog clothed in cloth ²³⁰⁵ and with a bell hung [round its neck]; and he made a kinsman of his own, named Koshihaki, ²³⁰⁶ lead it by a string and present it [to the Heavenly Sovereign]. So the Heavenly Sovereign ordered them to desist from burning [the house].

²²⁹⁸ i.e., Waka-kusaka-be.

²²⁹⁹ See Sect. XLIV, Note 31. The Kusaka here mentioned is that in Kafuchi.

²³⁰⁰ From tada, "straight" and koyuru "to cross," this being a short cut over the mountains.

²³⁰¹ The original of this clause is 有上堅魚作舎屋之家, which is read katsuwo wo agete ya wo tsukureru ihe ari. The katsuwo (properly p. 390*katsuwo-gi* 堅魚木) is the name of the uppermost portion of the roof in modern Shinto temples, and apparently in ancient times also in houses that were not devoted to religious purposes. The difficulty is not with the sense, but with the derivation of the word katsuwo-gi. Following the characters with which it is here and elsewhere written, Motowori sees in it a reference to the shape of the blocks of wood resembling "dried bonitoes," which is the modern signification of katsuwo. But Moribe, in his "Examination of Difficult Words," proposes a derivation which approves itself more to the present writer's mind, viz., kadzuku wo-gi (戴小木), "small timbers atop" (see "Examination of Difficult Words," s.v.). Motowori's Commentary, Vol. XLI, pp. 11-14, should be consulted for a discussion of the whole question of the use of these frames in ancient times, and for the special force to be attributed to the word "raised" (上) in this passage.

²³⁰³ i.e., did humble obeisance by prostrating himself on the ground.

²³⁰⁴ Or, according to the older reading, "This i.e., thy command) [is to be received with] awe."

²³⁰⁵ Or, "tied with [a string of] cloth." The translation follows Motowori's interpretation.

²³⁰⁶ The name signifies "loin-girded," i.e., as may be presumed, "wearing a sword."

SECTION CLIII.—EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU (PART IV.—HE WOOS PRINCESS WAKA-KUSAKA-BE)

Forthwith making a progress to the residence of Queen Wakakusaka-be the Heavenly Sovereign sent the dog as a message, saying: "This thing is a strange thing which I got to day on the road. So it is a thing to woo with,"—and so saying, sent it in as a present. Thereupon Queen Waka-kusaka-be sent to say to the Heavenly Sovereign: "It is very alarming that thou shouldst make a progress with thy back to the sun. ²³⁰⁷ So I will come up straight [to the capital], and respectfully serve thee." ²³⁰⁸ When therefore he returned up and dwelt in the palace, he went and stood on the ascent ²³⁰⁹ of that mountain, and sang, saying:

"In the hollow between the nearer and the further mountain, this Mount Kusakabe and Mount Heguri, [is] growing the flourishing broad-leafed boar-oak; at the base grow intertwining bamboos; on the top grow luxuriant bamboos:—we sleep not [now] intertwined like the intertwining bamboos, we sleep not certainly like the luxuriant bamboos: [but] oh! my beloved spouse, with whom [I] shall afterwards sleep intertwined!" ²³¹⁰

And he forthwith sent back a messenger with this Song. ²³¹¹

²³⁰⁷ For he had come from Yamato in the East to Kafuchi in the West.

²³⁰⁸ The meaning is: "Thy Majesty must not come to woo me here, as the direction is unlucky. But I will myself come up straightway to the palace to be "thine Empress."

²³⁰⁹ The ascent or way up here mentioned is, says Motowori, the Tadagoye Road, and the mountain is Mount Kusaka. See Sect. CLII, Notes 2 and 3.

²³¹⁰ In this Song the Emperor consoles himself for the delay in his union with Princess Waka-kusaka-be by reflecting that after all she will soon be his.—The first half of the poem down to the colon and dash is a Preface to the rest. Most of the difficult words occurring in it have been explained in previous notes; for the "broad-leafed bear-oak" see Sect. LXXII, Note, 19; for tatami-komo, the Pillow-Word by which Heguri is preceded in the Japanese text, see Sect. LXXXIX, Note 12. Kusaka-be is curious, for whereas it properly signifies Kusaka-Tribe,—this tribe or family being called after the place where they resided,—the place itself came to be renamed after them when the fact of the posterior origin of the family designation had been forgotten. The reason (or thep. 392 mention in the Preface of the oak-tree, which is not referred to in the main text of the poem, is difficult to ascertain. Moribe thinks, however that it is on account of the luxuriance of its foliage which, as if it were a Preface within the Preface, paves the way for the mention of the thick-growing bamboos. The punning connection between tashinu-dake, "luxuriant bamboos," and tashi ni ha wi-nezu, "we sleep not certainly," is necessarily obliterated in the English translation. "Certainly" must be taken in the sense of "undisturbedly."

²³¹¹ I.e., as may be conjectured, a messenger dispatched to him by his mistress. It seems best to suppose the author to represent the Emperor as not having actually gone to her house at all, but as having only communicated with her by messenger.

SECTION CLIV.—EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU (PART V.—STORY OF THE WOMAN AKAWI-KO)

Again once when the Heavenly Sovereign going out for amusement, reached the River Miwa, ²³¹² there was a girl, whose aspect was very beautiful, washing clothes by the river-side. The Heavenly Sovereign asked the girl, [saying]: "Whose child art thou?" She replied, saying: "My name is Akawi-ko of the Hiketa Tribe." ²³¹³ Then he caused her to be told, saying: "Do not thou marry a husband. I will send for thee, "—and [with these words] he returned to the palace. So eighty years had already passed while she reverently awaited the Heavenly Sovereign's commands. Thereupon Akawi-ko thought: "As, while looking for the [Imperial] commands, I have already passed many years, and as my face and form are lean and withered, there is no longer any hope. Nevertheless, if I do not show [the Heavenly Sovereign] how truly I have waited, my disappointment will be unbearable;"—and [so saying] she caused merchandise to be carried on tables holding an hundred, ²³¹⁴ and came forth and presented [these gifts as] tribute. Thereat the Heavenly Sovereign, who had quite forgotten what he had formerly commanded, asked Akawi-ko, saying: "What old woman art thou, and why art thou come hither?" Then Akawiko replied, saying: "Having in such and such a month of such and such a year received the Heavenly Sovereign's commands, I have been reverently awaiting the great command until this day, and eighty years have past by. Now my appearance is quite decrepit, and there is no longer any hope. Nevertheless I have come forth in order to show and declare my faithfulness." Thereupon the Heavenly Sovereign was greatly startled [and exclaimed]: "I had quite forgotten the former circumstance; and thou meanwhile, ever faithfully awaiting my commands, hast vainly let pass by the years of thy prime. This is very pitiful." In his heart he wished to marry her, but shrank from her extreme age, and could not make the marriage; but he conferred on her an august Song. That Song said:

"How awful is the sacred oak-tree, the oak-tree of the august dwelling! Maiden of the oak-plain!" ²³¹⁵

Again he sang, saying:

²³¹² Miwa gawa. It is the stream which flows past Hatsuse. For Miwa see Sect. LXV, Note 8.

²³¹³ Hiketa-bo no Akawi-ko. Hiketa is in Yamato. The etymology of the word is obscure. Akawi-ko signifies "red boar child;" but the appropriateness of the name to the woman in the story is not made to appear.

²³¹⁴ See Sect. XXXVII, Note 7.

²³¹⁵ Moribe says that, in this Song, the forgetful Monarch calls to mind the majestic and awful appearance of the sacred tree in the temple-grounds, and is moved by this religious thought to repent of his neglectful treatment as her who had so patiently waited for him through so many years. Motowori, on the contrary, sees in the words nothing more than a comparison of the old woman to some sacred tree of immemorial age, and the aversion felt by the monarch to an union with her.—The oak mentioned (the Kashi, Quercus myrsinæfolia) is an evergreen species. Both Motowori and Moribe consider that mimoro in the original Japanese of this Song should be taken, not as a proper name (see Sect. XXVIII, Notes 3 and 5), but simply as signifying "a sacred dwelling." As Miwa is mentioned in the earlier part of the story, it might seem more natural to regard mimoro as likewise being a Proper Name. But the word mimoro itself signifying "sacred spot," the difference between the two views does not amount to much, and it is best to follow native authority. "Oak-plain" (kashi-hara) means "a place planted with oak-trees." The first sentence of the Song must be looked on as a sort of preface to the second.

"The younger chestnut orchard plain of Hiketa:—o si dormivissem cum iliâ in juventâ!
Oh! how old she has become!" ²³¹⁶

Then the tears that Akawi-ko wept quite drenched the red-dyed sleeve that she had on. ²³¹⁷ In reply to the great august Song, she sang, saying:

"Left over from the piling up of the jewel-wall piled up round the august dwelling,—to whom shall the person of the Deity's temple go?" ²³¹⁸

Again she sang, saying:

"Oh! how enviable is she who is in her bloom like the flowering lotus,—the lotus of the inlet, of the inlet of Kusaka!" ²³¹⁹

Then the old woman was sent back plentifully endowed. So these four Songs are Quiet
Songs. ²³²⁰

²³¹⁶ The first words of this Song down to the colon and dash are a Preface to the Song proper, whose meaning stands in need of no explanation,—Moribe surmises that the word kuri, "chestnut," was formerly p. 395 a general name for all sorts of fruits, somewhat like our English word "berry."

²³¹⁷ The drenching of the sleeve with tears is a common figure in Japanese poetry.

²³¹⁸ Or we might (following Moribe) render thus: "Left over from the guarding of the jewel-grove guard at the august dwelling," etc. The wording of his Song is far from clear. While Motowori sees in it a reference to the construction of a wall round the ground of a temple, the overplus of the materials for which sacred wall could not, it may be presumed, be applied to any profane purpose, Moribe disputes the propriety of such an interpretation of the word kaki which, according to him, denotes the grove planted in temple-grounds, temples never having been surrounded by walls such as Motowori assumes the existence of, nor even by "hedges" or "fences," which is the more usual acceptance of the term. He thinks, therefore, that the superficial signification of the actual words of the Song is that the priest, who has all his life been in the service of one particular shrine, cannot desert it for the adoration of some other deity. The underlying deeper significance of the little poem is in either case the same: Akawi-ko had, during her long waiting of eighty years, remained true to her first love, the Emperor. For every reason it had been impossible for her ever to give her affections to another, and she had now come up to the capital to demonstrate to him who had forgotten her the unchangeable nature of her feelings.

²³¹⁹ This pretty little poem is too clear to need any comment. Moribe supposes that some lotuses brought from Kusaka may have been among the presents made by Akawi-ko to the Emperor. In the original Japanese the reference to the lotuses comes first, as a sort of preface to the rest of the poem. The laws of English construction necessitate its being put last in the translation.

²³²⁰ See Sect. CXXIV, Note 19.

SECTION CLV.—EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU (PART VI.—HE MAKES A PROGRESS TO YESHINU)

When the Heavenly Sovereign made a progress to the palace of Yeshinu, ²³²¹ there was on the bank of the Yeshinu river a girl of beautiful appearance. So having wedded this girl, he returned to the Palace. Afterwards, when he again made a progress to Yeshinu, he halted where he had met the girl, and in that place raised a great august throne, ²³²² seated himself on that august throne, played on his august lute, and made the maiden dance. Then he composed an august Song on account of the maiden's good dancing. That Song said:

"Oh! that the maiden dancing to the lute-playing, of the august hand of the Deity seated on the throne might continue for ever!" ²³²³

²³²¹ See Sect. XLVI, Note 3.

²³²² See Sect. CXII, Note 2.

²³²³ This Song presents no difficulties. In it the Emperor speaks of himself as a Deity, and is enthusiastically praised by the commentator Moribe for so doing.

SECTION CLVI.—EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU (PART VII.—THE HORSE-FLY AND THE DRAGON-FLY)

When forthwith he made a progress to the Moor of Akidzu, ²³²⁴ and augustly hunted, the Heavenly Sovereign sat on an august throne. Then a horse-fly bit his august arm, and forthwith a dragon-fly came and ate up ²³²⁵ the horse-fly, and flew [away]. Thereupon he composed an august Song. That Song said:

"Who is it tells in the great presence that game is lying on the peak of Womuro at Mi-yeshinu? Our Great Lord, who tranquilly carries on the government, being seated on the throne to await the game, a horse-fly alights on and stings the fleshy part of his arm fully clad in a sleeve of white stuff, and a dragon-fly quickly eats up that horse-fly. That it might properly bear its name, the land of Yamato was called the Island of the Dragon-Fly." ²³²⁶

So from that time that moor was called by the name of Akidzu-nu. ²³²⁷

²³²⁴ Akidzu-nu. See Note 4 to this section.

²³²⁵ Or, "bit."

²³²⁶ The signification of the greater portion of this Song is clear enough, and is sufficiently explained by the context. The word "who" however admits of two interpretations, Motowori taking it to signify some one," whereas Moribe, keeping the literal meaning of "who?" sees in it an angry exclamation of the monarch's at having been brought out to the hunt under exaggerated promises of game. Womuro means "little cave," but is here a proper name. Mi-yeshinu is a form of the word Yoshino which is frequently met with in poetry, the syllable mi being probably, as Mabuchi tells us in his "Commentary on the Collection of a Myriad Leaves," equivalent to ma, and therefore simply an "Ornamental Prefix." The phrase "tranquilly carries on the government" represents the Japanese yasumishishi, the Pillow-Word for wa go oho-kimi, "our Great Lord," which latter phrase descriptive of the Sovereign is here put into the Sovereign's own mouth. "Of white stuff, shiro-tahe no, is another Pillow-Word. The only real difficulty in this Song meets us is the interpretation of its concluding sentence. The meaning apparently intended to be conveyed is that it was in order to prove itself worthy of its name that the dragon-fly performed the loyal deed which forms the subject of the tale. But it so, the author forgets that it was not the dragon-fly that was called after Japan, but Japan that was called after the dragon-fly (Akidzushima, "Dragon-fly-Island," from akidzu, "dragon-fly"). What should be the point of the whole poem therefore fails of application. The name "Island of the Dragon-Fly" has already appeared in Sect. V (Note 26).

²³²⁷ I.e., Dragon-Fly Moor. See Motowori's remarks in his "Examination of the Synonyms for Japan," p. 26.

SECTION CLVII.—EMPEROR YU-RIYAKU (PART VII.— ADVENTURE WITH A WILD BOAR)

Again once the Heavenly Sovereign made a progress up to the summit of Mount Kadzuraki. ²³²⁸ Then a large [wild] boar ran out. When the Heavenly Sovereign forthwith shot the boar with a whizzing barb, ²³²⁹ the boar, furious, came towards him roaring. ²³³⁰ So the Heavenly Sovereign, alarmed at the roaring, climbed up to the top of an alder. Then he sang, saying:

"The branch of the alder-tree on the opportune mound which I climbed in my flight on account of the terribleness of the roaring of the boar, of the wounded boar, which our great lord who tranquilly carries on the government had been pleased to shoot!" ²³³¹

²³²⁸ See Sect. LV, Note 1.

²³²⁹ See Sect. XXIII, Note, 7.

²³³⁰ This is the sense attributed by the commentators to the obscure word utaki, which seems to be only found written phonetically.

²³³¹ Our author cannot be right in attributing this Song to the Emperor, and we need not hesitate to accept the different version of the story given in the parallel passage of the "Chronicle," where the Monarch, as might be expected from all the other details that have been preserved concerning him, bravely faces the boar, while it is one of his attendants who runs away and climbs a tree to be out of danger, and afterwards composes these lines. This Song is a good instance of what Mr. Aston (in his "Grammar of the Japanese Written Language," 2nd Edit., p. 194) has said concerning some of the short poems of a later date: "These sentences are not statements of fact; they merely picture to the mind a state of things without making any assertion respecting it." Here we, as it were, simply see the frightened courtier sitting breathless and terrified amid the branches of the alder, and the whole verse has but the meaning of an exclamation. The term ari-wo rendered "opportune mound." is the only word in the text which raises any difficulties p. 399 of interpretation. Moribe's exegesis has here been followed. According to the older view it signifies "barren mound." For the words "our great lord who tranquilly carries on the government" see Sect CLVI, Note 3.

SECTION CLVIII.—EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU (PART IX.—REVELATION OF THE GREAT DEITY OF KADZURAKI, LORD OF ONE WORD)

Again once, when the Heavenly Sovereign made a progress up Mount Kadzuraki, the various officials ²³³² were all clothed in green-stained garments with red cords that had been granted to them. At that time there were people ascending the mountain on the opposite mountain acclivity quite similar to the order of the Heavenly Monarch's retinue. Again the style of the habiliments and likewise the people were similar and not distinguishable. ²³³³ Then the Heavenly Sovereign gazed, and sent to ask, saying: "There being no other King in Yamato excepting myself, what person goeth thus?" The style of the reply again was like unto the commands of a Heavenly Sovereign. Hereupon the Heavenly Sovereign, being very angry, fixed his arrow [in his bow], and the various officials all fixed their arrows [in their bows]. Then those people also all fixed their arrows [in their bows]. So the Heavenly Sovereign again sent to ask, saying: "Then tell thy name. Then let each of us tell his name, and [then] let fly his arrow." Thereupon [the other] replied, saying: "As I was the first to be asked, I will be the first to tell my name. I am the Deity who dispels with a word the evil and with a word the good,—the Great Deity of Kadzuraki, Lord of One Word." ²³³⁴ The Heavenly Sovereign hereupon trembled, and said: "I reverence [thee], my Great Deity. I understood not that thy great person would be revealed;" ²³³⁵—and having thus spoken, he, beginning by his great august sword and likewise bow and arrows, took off the garments which the hundred officials had on, and worshipfully presented them [to the Great Deity]. ²³³⁶ Then the Great Deity, Lord of One Word, clapping his hands, ²³³⁷ accepted the offering. So when the Heavenly Sovereign made his progress back, the Great Deity came down the mountain, ²³³⁸ and respectfully escorted him to the entrance ²³³⁹ of the Hatsuse mountain. So it was at that time the Great Deity Lord of One Word was revealed.

²³³² Literally, "the hundred officials." This Chinese phrase has been met with before in the "Records," and recurs in this Section.

²³³³ The original has the character 傾, out of which it is hard to make sense. Motowori's proposal to consider it put by error for 頌, has therefore been adopted, though the translator feels by no means sure that it is a happy one. According to the strict Chinese sense of 頌, it would not fit with this passage any better than 傾; but in Japanese we may be justified in understanding 不頌 to mean "not distinguishable."

²³³⁴ In the original: 吾者雖惡事而一言雖善一事而言言離之神

葛城之一言主之大神者也. The import of the obscure expression "dispelling with a word the good" is not rendered much more intelligible by Motowori's attempt to explain it. For Kadzuraki see LV, Note. 1.

²³³⁵ Literally, "that there would be a present (or manifest) great person."

²³³⁶ I.e., he kept nothing for himself, but from his own sword and bow and arrows down to the ceremonial garments in which his followers were clad, gave every thing to the god.

²³³⁷ In token of joy, says Motowori.

²³³⁸ The characters 満山末, rendered by "came down the mountain," are evidently the result of a copyist's carelessness. The translation follows Motowori's proposal to emend the text to 降山來.

²³³⁹ Literally "mouth."

SECTION CLIX.—EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU (PART X.—THE MOUND OF THE METAL SPADE)

Again when the Heavenly Sovereign made a progress to Kasuga to wed Princess Wodo, ²³⁴⁰ daughter of the Grandee Satsuki of Wani, ²³⁴¹ a maiden met him by the way, and forthwith seeing the Imperial progress, ran and hid on the side of a mound. So he composed an august Song. That august Song said:

"Oh! the mound where the maiden is hiding! Oh for five hundred metal spades! then might [we] dig her out!" ²³⁴²

So that mound was called by the name of the Mound of the Metal Spade. ²³⁴³

²³⁴⁰ Wodo-hime. The signification of this name is obscure.

²³⁴¹ Wani no Satsuki no omi. For Wani see Sect. LXII, Note 11. Satsuki is the old Japanese name of the fifth moon.

²³⁴² Moribe thus paraphrases this Song: "The Monarch had met a girl carrying a spade in her hand, and as she was beautiful, wished to address her; but she ran off and hid on the hill-side, leaving her spade behind her. His words express a desire for five hundred spades like hers, with which to break down the hill-side and dig her out. . . . It is in joke that he talks of the maiden who was on the other side of the hill as being inside it." That in ancient times all digging implements were not made of metal will be seen by reference to Sect. CXXIV, Note 9.

²³⁴³ Kanasuki no woko.

SECTION CLX.—EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU (PART XI.—THE LEAF IN THE CUP)

Again when the Heavenly Sovereign made a copious feast under a hundred-branching tsuki-tree ²³⁴⁴ at Hatsuse, a female attendant from Mihe ²³⁴⁵ in the land of Ise lifted up the great august cup, and presented it to him. Then from the hundred-branching tsuki-tree there fell a leaf and floated in the great august cup. The female attendant, not knowing that the fallen leaf was floating in the cup, did not desist from presenting ²³⁴⁶ the great august liquor to the Heavenly Sovereign, who, perceiving the leaf floating in the cup, knocked the female attendant down, put his sword to her neck, and was about to cut off her head, when the female attendant spoke to the Heavenly Sovereign, saying: "Slay me not! There is something that I must say to thee:" and forthwith she sang, saying:

"The palace of Hishiro at Makimuku is a palace where shines the morning sun, a palace where glistens the evening sun, a palace plentifully rooted as the root of the bamboo, a palace with spreading roots like the roots of the trees, a palace pestled with oh! eight hundred [loads of] earth, As for the branches of the hundred-fold flourishing tsuki-tree growing by the house of new licking at the august gate [made of] chamæcyparis [wood], the uppermost branch has the sky above it, the middle branch has the east above it, the lowest branch has the country above it. A leaf from the tip of the uppermost branch falls against the middle branch; a leaf from the tip of the middle branch falls against the lowest branch; a leaf from the tip of the lowest branch, falling into the oil floating in the fresh jewelled goblet which the maid of Mihe is lifting up, all [goes] curdle-curdle. Ah! this is very awful, August Child of the High-Shining Sun! The tradition of the thing, too this!" ²³⁴⁷

²³⁴⁴ Said to be scarcely distinguishable from the keyaki (Zelkova keaki)

²³⁴⁵ See Sect. LXXXIX, Note 7.

²³⁴⁶ Literally "still presented."

²³⁴⁷ To understand the allusion at the beginning of this Song to the palace of Hishiro at Makimuku, which had been the residence of the Emperor Kei-kō (See Sect. LXXVI, Note 1), it must be known that in the account of the reign of that monarch as given in the "Chronicles" there is a story which, like that in the text, turns on carelessness in dealing with a goblet,—carelessness which Kei-kō graciously pardoned. Moreover the scene of the incident here related was in the immediate neighbourhood of the old palace of Hishiro. There was therefore a double reason for referring to that place; and the under-current of insinuation is, that as Kei-kō in the olden time forgave the courtiers who forgot his goblet, will not the present Sovereign forgive the maid of Mihe for letting a leaf fall into his? The poetess, after describing the splendour and solidity of the Imperial abode, passes on to a mention of the luxuriant and many-branching tsuki-tree growing near "the house of new licking," i.e., the sacred hall where the Sovereign performed each year the ceremony of tasting the first-fruits of the harvest. The "gate" may either be taken in its literal acceptance, or else regarded as used by metonymy for the palace itself. The description of that which the middle and lowest branches "have above them" is somewhat obscure, and perhaps the words should not be too strictly pressed for a perfectly rational meaning, their chief use being as metrical parallelisms. The supposition of the commentators is however that the poetess, in speaking of this immense tree, meant to say that the middle branch (or branches) spread eastward, and the lowest branches westward. Next we are told of the fall of the fatal leaf into the oil, i.e., into the liquor, contained in the Imperial goblet; and the poetess, before acknowledging the awfulness of her misdemeanour, skilfully brings in an allusion to the Japanese account of the creation, when the drops that fell from the spear used by the creator and creatrix Izanagi and Izanami to make the brine "go curdle-curdle" did very good work indeed; for they were piled up and became the first-formed island for the Japanese archipelago (see Sect. III): for drops to fall down, or for leaves to fall into drops (of wine), must therefore surely be a good omen rather

So on her presenting this Song, her crime was pardoned. Then the Empress sang. Her Song said:

"Present the luxuriant august liquor to the august child of the high-shining sun, who is broad like the leaves, who is brilliant like the blossoms of the broad-foliaged five hundred[-fold branching] true camellia-tree that stands growing by the house of new licking in this high metropolis of Yamato, on this high-timbered mound of the metropolis The tradition of this thing, too this!" ²³⁴⁸

Forthwith the Heavenly Sovereign sang, saying:

"The people of the great palace, having put on scarfs like the quail-birds having put their tails together like wagtails' and congregated together like the yard-sparrows, may perhaps to-day be truly steeped in liquor,—the people of the palace of the high-shining sun. The tradition of the thing, too, this." ²³⁴⁹ than a crime. Conformably with the hesitating nature of her allusion, the maiden leaves it quite uncertain what is conceived of as "going curdle-curdle" in the present instance. In fact, neither must the thought be pressed too far, nor the sentence searched too rigorously from a grammatical point of view. Such intentional vagueness is one of the specific characteristics of a great deal of the poetry of Japan. The words "the tradition of the thing, too, this!", which conclude the poem, are obscure in another and more usual sense; but, having been already treated of in Note 4 to Sect. XXIV, they need not detain us here. They do not affect the sense of the rest of the poem. Two points more remain to be noticed: one is that the word Mihe and hi no mi hado ("august gate of chamæcyparis") are respectively preceded by the Pillow-Words ariginu no, whose signification is disputed, and makisaku, which signifies "splitting true trees;" the other, that the original of the word "glistens" near the commencement of the poem only has that sense if, following Moribe, we identify hi-gakeru with hi-kagayakeru. As it stands, the word kakeru lends itself more naturally to the interpretation of "sets." But the logical difficulty of accepting the phrase "where the sun sets" in such a context, where on the contrary some phrase of good omen is alone appropriate, seems greater than the philological difficulty of deriving hi-gakeru by a process of contraction from hi-kagayakeru. The designation of the Emperor or Heir Apparent by the title of "august child of the high-shining sun" has been met with before, and needs no explanation when the solar ancestry claimed by the Japanese monarchs is called to mind.

²³⁴⁸ The gist of this Song, which must be supposed to be addressed to the female attendant, is simply: "Present the goblet full of liquor to the Emperor."—In accordance with the rules of Japanese construction the Imperative "present," which is the chief Verb of the sentence, comes last, and is preceded by the comparison of the Monarch to the leaves and flowers of the camellia-tree, while the comparatively unimportant words describing the position of the tree come at the beginning. Thus in a literal English translation the climax is necessarily spoilt through the reversal of the order of the words. The "broad-leafed camellia" has already appeared in Sect. CXXIII, Note 11, the "house of new licking" has been explained in the note immediately preceding the present one, and the incomprehensible concluding exclamation has been discussed in Sect. XXIV, Note 4. The "high metropolis" of Yamato is of course the then capital. There is however some doubt whether the word take-chi, which is here thus rendered, should not rather be considered as a proper name. The expression ko-dakaru, rendered "high-timbered," is also doubtful. Motowori interprets it simply as "slightly high." Moribe seems right in explaining the word tsukasa to mean "a mound."

²³⁴⁹ This Song is here out of place, and is supposed by Motowori to have been composed, not by the Emperor, but by some court-lady who was absent from the feast. The meaning simply is: "Ah yes," 'tis to-day that the court ladies are "drinking their fill of rice-liquor[—and would that I were with them]!"—The picture here presented of the manners of the court is not attractive; but the comparison of the ladies' appearance with that of various birds is quaint. The commentators tell us that the appropriateness of the use of the word "scarfs" as applied to the quail lies in the peculiar plumage of that bird, which makes it look as if it had a scarf on. "Having put their tails together" means "standing with their trains in a row." The epithet "yard" applied to the sparrows paints the habits of that bird. The words "great palace" are in the original preceded by the Pillow-Word momoshiki no, whose signification is disputed. After lines

These three Songs are Songs of Heavenly Words. ²³⁵⁰ So at this copious feast this female attendant from Mihe was praised and plentifully endowed.

Kefu mo ka mo

Saka-mi-dzuku-rashi.

rendered "may perhaps to day be truly steeped in liquor," Moribe would like to consider the lines

Asu ma koma

Saka-mi-dzuku-rashi,

i.e., "may perhaps to-morrow be truly steeped in liquor" to have been accidentally omitted. There is no doubt but that their insertion would add to the effect of the poem from the point of view of style.

²³⁵⁰ 天語歌, read ama-koto-uta. This expression is altogether obscure, and the commentators differ in their interpretations of it. Mabuchi, following the characters, sees in them an allusion to the words "august child of the high-shining sun" which recurs in each of the three Songs thus bracketed together. Motowori thinks that ama-koto should be regarded as standing for amari-goto (餘語) "surplus words," in allusion to the meaningless refrain with which the Songs in question terminate. Other Songs, however, which end in the same manner, are not thus designated. Moribe's exegesis, though founded on Motowori's is preferable to it. Accepting ama-koto as a contraction of amari-goto, he would take the second half of the compound in the sense of "things," not "words" (事 not 語), and regard the whole as signifying that the Songs were composed or sung after the conclusion of the actual feast. Against this view must be set the fact that the Chinese characters lend it no support. The translator, has, as usual when in doubt, preferred to adhere to the sense given by the characters.

SECTION CLXI.—EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU (PART XII.— SONGS BY THE EMPEROR AND PRINCESS WODO)

On the day of this copious feast the Heavenly Sovereign, when Princess Wodo of Kasuga ²³⁵¹ presented to him the great august liquor, sang again, saying:

"Oh! the grandee's daughter holding the excellent flagon! [If] thou hold the excellent flagon, hold it firmly! Hold it quite firmly, more and more firmly, child holding the excellent flagon." ²³⁵²

This is a Cup Song. ²³⁵³ Then Princess Wodo presented a Song. That Song said:

"Would that I were [thou,] the lower board of the arm-rest whereon our great lord who tranquilly carries on the government stands leaning at morn, stands leaning at eve! Oh! mine elder brother!" ²³⁵⁴

This is a Quiet Song.

²³⁵¹ Kasuga no Wodo-hime. See Sect. CLIX. Note I.

²³⁵² This Song is simply a reiterated, and playful injunction to the maiden to hold firmly the flagon containing the intoxicating liquor; and Motowori is, as Moribe remarks, putting more into the words than they are really meant to convey, when he says that they imply praise on the Monarch's part,—The English words "grandee's daughter" represent the Japanese omi no omina, a somewhat remarkable expression, which is interpreted by Motowori to signify "attendant maiden." The translator prefers the view propounded in Moribe's comment on this Song, and has therefore adopted it. The expression is in the original preceded by the untranslatable Pillow-Word minasossoku (Moribe reads the last syllable with the nigori,—gu), The word rendered "excellent flagon" is ho-dari, the first element of the compound being explained by the commentators in the sense of "excellent," i.e., "big," while the second is the same as the modern word taru, "a cask." In ancient times, however, the signification of tari or taru was that of a vessel to pour liquor from, not p. 408 to store liquor in,—i.e., a flagon, not a cask. The words "quite firmly, more and more firmly" represent the Japanese shita-gataku ya-gataku according to Moribe's exegesis. Motowori's interpretation of them in the sense of "[take the] bottom firmly and the top firmly" is less acceptable.

²³⁵³ Thus does the editor of 1687, who is followed by Moribe, understand the original expression uki-uta. Motowori's interpretation, "Floating Song," seems less good.

²³⁵⁴ So enamoured is the maiden of the Sovereign that she would fain be even the board of the arm-rest on which he leans.—The expression "lower board" is misleading, for it refers simply to the self-evident fact that the board forming the top of the little low table used as an arm-rest by one squatting on his mat is below the arm, as whose support it serves. The words "stands leaning" must probably be understood to signify "sits" or "squats leaning." The expression "our great lord who tranquilly carries on the government" is a frequently recurring periphrasis for the word "Emperor," and has been explained in Sect. LXXXVII, Note 4. The words "at morn" and "at eve" are literally in the original "at morning doors" and "at evening doors," the reference being to the fact that the doors of a house are respectively opened and closed in the early morning and at nightfall. The exclamation "Oh! mine elder brother" is addressed to the board of the arm-rest. Conf. the first Song in Sect LXXXIX, where Yamato-take apostrophizes a pine-tree in the same terms.

SECTION CLXII.—EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU (PART XIII.— HIS AGE AND PLACE OF BURIAL)

The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were one hundred and twenty-four. His august mausoleum is at Takawashi in Tajihi ²³⁵⁵ in Kafuchi.

²³⁵⁵ For Tajihi see Sect. CXXXII, Note 4. Takawashi signifies "high eagle."

SECTION CLXIII.—EMPEROR SEI-NEI (PART I.—SEARCH FOR A SUCCESSOR TO HIM)

His Augustness Shiraka-no-oho-yamato-ne-ko dwelt at the palace of Mikakuri at Ihare, ²³⁵⁶ and ruled the Empire. This Heavenly Sovereign had no Empress, and likewise no august children. So the Shiraka-Clan ²³⁵⁷ was established as his august proxy. So after the Heavenly Sovereign's decease, there was no King to rule the Empire. Thereupon, on enquiry [being made] for a King who should rule the sun's succession, Oshinumi-no-iratsume, ²³⁵⁸ another name for whom was Princess Ihi-toyo, younger sister of Prince Ichinobe-oshiha-wake, ²³⁵⁹ [was found to be] residing at the palace of Tsunusashi at Takaki in Oshinumi in Kadzuraki. ²³⁶⁰

²³⁵⁶ For Ihare see Sect. XLIII, Note 26. Mika-kuri signifies "jar-chestnut."

²³⁵⁷ Shiraka-be.

²³⁵⁸ In Sect. CXXXI (Note 7) this name appears as Awomi-no-iratsume. Both Awomi and Oshinumi are supposed to be names of places. The latter is the name of a district in Yamato. Its etymology is obscure. For Ihi-toyo see Sect. CXXXI, Note 8.

²³⁵⁹ See Sect. CXXXI (Note 5), where however the title of wake ("Lord") is omitted.

²³⁶⁰ For Kadzuraki see Sect. LV, Note 1, and for Oshinumi see Note 3 to the present Sect. Takaki seems to signify "high castle," while Tsunusashi is obscure. (See Motowori's remarks on these two names in Vol. XLIII, p. 3 of his Commentary.)

SECTION CLXIV.—EMPEROR SEI-NEI (PART II.—PRINCES OHOKO AND WOKE ARE DISCOVERED)

Then Wodate, Chief of the Mountain Clan ²³⁶¹ when appointed governor of the land of Harima, arrived just at [the time of] a rejoicing for the new cave of an inhabitant called Shizhimu. ²³⁶² Hereupon, when the feasting and the drinking were at their height, they all danced in turn. So two young children ²³⁶³ [employed] to light the fire sat beside the furnace. ²³⁶⁴ These young children were made to dance. Then one of the young children said: "Do thou the elder brother dance first." The elder brother likewise said: "Do thou the younger brother dance first." When they thus yielded to each other, the people who were met together laughed at their manner of yielding to each other. ²³⁶⁵ So at last the elder brother danced, [and when he had] finished, the younger when about to dance chanted, saying:

"On the bamboos on the mountain-slopes, behind which are hidden as soon as they appear my warrior-mate's sword, on whose hilt red earth was daubed, for whose cord red cloth was cut, and his red flags that were set up!—Beggarly descendants of King Ichinobe-no-oshiha, august child of the Heavenly Sovereign Izaho-wake, who ruled the Empire as it were cutting the [bamboos'] roots and bending down their extremities, and like playing on an eight-stringed lute!" ²³⁶⁶

²³⁶¹ Yama-be no murazhiwodate. Yama-be has already appeared. Wo-date signifies "small shield."

²³⁶² For this name see Sect. CXLIX, Note 5. A similar festival at the inauguration of a new cave is mentioned in Sect. LXXX.

²³⁶³ Motowori's vain attempts to reconcile the dates with this statement of Princes Ohoko and Woke being "young children" at this time, after an interval of two reigns since the death of their father, will be found in Vol. XLIII, pp. 10-11, of his Commentary.

²³⁶⁴ I.e., as the commentators suppose, a place or vessel holding a light with which to kindle other lights for the feast. The word can scarcely here have its common signification of a "kitchen-range."

²³⁶⁵ I.e., at the fact of their being so courteous to each other.

²³⁶⁶ This so-called "chant,"—it is not a Song, because not in metre, and is accordingly not transcribed syllabically,—is at first sight so difficult as to seem to defy translation, and to make the student apply to the whole of his interpretation Motowori's closing remark on his exegesis of one of phrases contained in it,—"this is mere guess-work, and the text demands further consideration." A little inspection shows, however, that the drift of the words is by no means so inscrutable as its partly ideographic and partly phonetic transcription makes it appear. The first part down to the colon and dash is a "Preface" to the second, the "Pivot" joining the two parts in the original Japanese being the word "bamboos." The laws of English construction unfortunately do not admit of the force of the original, which entirely depends on the position of the words, being rendered into our language. The appropriateness of the Preface to the body of the chant rests on the consideration that the bright articles mentioned in it, viz., the sword painted and decorated with red streamers (or perhaps tied on with a red sash) and also the red banners are easily hidden behind the thick leaves of a bamboo-grove, just as the Imperial origin of the two young Princes was hidden beneath the vile office which they filled in Shizhimu's household. The clause "cutting the [bamboos'] roots and bending down their extremities" forms the chief difficulty. Indeed the word "roots" is supplied by Motowori, and his interpretation of the phrase is merely tentative. We may, p. 412 however, until some better explanation is offered, see in it a reference to the energetic manner in which the Empire was ruled by the young princes grandfather, the Emperor Izaho-wake (i-chiū), or else perhaps by their father Ichinobe-no-Oshiha. This latter view is preferred by Motowori, though according to the history Ichinobe-no-oshiha never actually ascended the throne. The position of the Verb "ruled" in the Japanese text permits of either interpretation. The comparison of the government of the Empire to playing on a lute is poetical and appropriate. It should be noticed that in the Japanese text the construction of the sentence forming the main body of the chant is the reverse of what it is made to appear to be in the translation. The words "beggarly descendants," by which, as a climax, the singer reveals his own and

Then forthwith Chief Wodate, starting at the sound [of these words], and rolling off his couch, ²³⁶⁷drove away the people of the cave; and having set the two ²³⁶⁸princes [one] on his left knee and [the other] on his right and wept and lamented, he collected the people together, and having built a temporary palace, and set [the two princes] to dwell in that temporary palace, he sent a courier up [to the capital]. Thereupon their aunt, Queen Ihi-toyo, delighted to hear [the news], made them come up to the palace.

his brother's illustrious descent, therefore come last of all and produce on Wodate the startling effect which we read of in the next sentence.

²³⁶⁷ Or, "seat." In ancient times each person in a room sat on a special mat, and it is that small mat which is here meant.

²³⁶⁸ The Numeral is accompanied by the Auxiliary hashira, properly used for gods and goddesses.

SECTION CLXV.—EMPEROR SEI-NEI (PART III.—THE GRANDEE SHIBI²³⁶⁹)

So when the government of the Empire was about to be assumed, ²³⁷⁰ the Grandee Shibi, ²³⁷¹ ancestor of the Grandees of Heguri ²³⁷² mixed in the Songs, and took the hand of the beautiful person whom His Augustness Woke was about to wed. This maiden was a daughter of one of the Headmen of Uda, ²³⁷³ and her name was Ofuwo. ²³⁷⁴ Then His Augustness Woke likewise mixed in the Song-Hedge. ²³⁷⁵ Thereupon the Grandee Shibi sang, saying:

(iv) "The further fin of the roof of the great palace is bent down at the corner."²³⁷⁶

When he had thus sung, and requested the conclusion of the Song, His Augustness Woke sang, saying:

(v) "It is on account of the great carpenter's awkwardness that it is bent down at the corner."²³⁷⁷

Then the Grandee Shibi sang again, saying:

(viii) "The great lord, on account of the magnanimity of his heart, does not enter and stand in the eight-fold hedge of branches of the child of a grandee."²³⁷⁸

Hereupon the Prince sang again, saying:

(i) "Looking on the breakers of the briny current, I see my spouse standing by the fin of the tunny that comes sporting."

Then the Grandee Shibi, getting more and more angry sang, saying:

²³⁶⁹ The student should compare the version of the story in this Sect. with that give in the "Chronicles of Japan," where it is placed some years later at the commencement of the reign of the Emperor Mu-retsū, and not only do many of the details disagree, but the arrangement and number of the Songs is different. It is impossible to make a consistent whole out of the story as here given; so, while noticing the linguistic peculiarities of each of the Songs in the order in which they appear in the present text, the translator has thought it advisable, following Moribe, to give in Note 12 a consistent scheme of interpretation for the whole. The small Roman numbers placed in brackets at the commencement of each Song indicate its place in the text as restored by Moribe.

²³⁷⁰ By one or other of the two Princes Ohoke and Woke. "Each," we are afterwards told, "ceded the Empire to the other," and it therefore remained for some time uncertain which was to be the Sovereign.

²³⁷¹ Shibi no omi. In some of the Songs that follow there is a play on the identity of this name with that of the tunny-fish (shibi). But whether that be really the derivation it is difficult to ascertain.

²³⁷² Heguri no omi. Conf. Sect. LXI, Note 45.

²³⁷³ Uda no obito-ra. Uda is the name of a place in Yamato.

²³⁷⁴ I.e., "big fish." But see the remark on this name in Note 12.

²³⁷⁵ Uta-gaki. The derivation of this curious expression is disputed; but the meaning seems to be "strophic" or "choric song," or "a place where singing in which more than one takes part is going on."

²³⁷⁶ In this Song the "further fin" (woto tsu hata-de, explained by the characters 彼鰭手 or 彼端手 is supposed to signify a pent-roof, or the eaves of the roof, or else an out-house connected by a slanting roof with the main building. The "great palace" is the palace of Prince Woke.

²³⁷⁷ The "great carpenter" is the carpenter employed to build the roof above-mentioned.

²³⁷⁸ The "eight-fold hedge of branches" is simply a "hedge," and the "child of a grandee" the Grandee Shibi himself.

(ix) "[Though] the eight-fold hedge of branches of the Prince the Great Lord be made fast at eight places, be made fast all round, 'tis a hedge that shall be cut, 'tis a hedge that shall be burnt." ²³⁷⁹

Then the Prince again sang, saying:

(ii) "Oh fisherman that spearest the tunny, the great fish! He being [there], thou must be sad at heart, tunny-spearing fisherman!" ²³⁸⁰

Having thus sung, the feast was concluded at dawn, and they all retired. Next morning the two Deities, ²³⁸¹ His Augustness Ohoke and His Augustness Woke, took counsel, saying: "All the people of the Court go to Court in the morning, and assemble at Shibi's gate at noon. So ²³⁸² Shibi must surely now be sleeping, and, moreover there will be nobody at the gate. So unless it be now, it were hard to plot against him," ²³⁸³—and forthwith they at once raised an army, and beleaguered the house of the Grandee Shibi, and slew him.

²³⁷⁹ The words "made fast" refer to the tying of the fence at certain places to give it strength. If we accepted Moribe's emendation of the final Verbyakemu, "burn," to yaremu, we should have to translate the last clause thus: "'tis a fence that shall be broken."

²³⁸⁰ "The great fish" (ofuwo yo shi) is the Pillow-Word for shibi, "tunny." The word "he" (which might also be rendered "it,"—the original being (so) must be taken to refer both to the fish itself and to the Grandee Shibi (i.e., the grandee Tunny), who bore its name.—Following Moribe's acceptable restoration of the original story, which is founded on a comparison of the text of these "Records" with that of the "Chronicles of Japan," we find that in the first Song of the series the young Prince half jokingly remarks on the fact of the Grandee Shibi appearing in public with the damsel who was to have been his (the Prince's) bride. Shibi's name, which, as already stated, signifies "tunny," furnishes the occasion for the marine metaphors borrowed from the current and the breakers. Shibi's answer (Song II,—in the "Records" wrongly ascribed to the prince), takes up the same strain, but in a more daunting tone: the prince is likened to a fisherman who would fain make a futile attempt to spear the great tunny, and his (the tunny's, i.e., the Grandee Shibi's) presence must indeed be pain and grief to him. In a third Song, which is given in the "Chronicles," but not in the "Records," the prince retorts that he relies on his good sword to win the girl for him in the end, and in Song IV the Grandee jeers at the dilapidated condition of his palace, and by implication at the sorry state of his fortunes,—a taunt to which the prince replies in Song V by saying that if the palace is dilapidated, and the Empire in disorder, the fault belongs to none other than to the Grandee himself. Songs VI and VII, which are not found in the "Records," only serve to continue the growing war of words, which in Song VII (in the "Records" wrongly attributed to the Grandee) comes to a climax by the prince exclaiming that if he does not force his way into the Grandee's mansion to seize his lady-love, it is only on account of the magnanimity of his disposition. To this the Grandee replies in Song IX (in the "Records" erroneously attributed to the prince) by a sort of tu quoque, vowing that he will cut and burn his way into the prince's palace. This is not the end of the dispute in the pages of the "Chronicles," but it is all that need detain the reader of the "Records." It should, however, be mentioned that in the "Chronicles" the name of the girl is Kage-hime: Ofuwo "Big Fish," which is here given, would seem to be nothing more than a nickname, which perhaps arose from the incidents of this metrics war of words.

²³⁸¹ The word used in the original is hashira, the Auxiliary Numeral for Deities. It recurs at the commencement of the next Section, where however it is not convenient to translate it.

²³⁸² The original here has the character 亦, "again" or "moreover." But this must be, as Motowori points to a copyist's error, Almost immediately below the same character recurs where it is equally out of place. The translator has followed Motowori in rendering it the first time by "so," and the second by "surely."

²³⁸³ i.e., There is no time like the present for plotting against him.

SECTION CLXVI.—EMPEROR SEI-NEI (PART IV.—PRINCE OHOKE CEDES THE EMPIRE TO PRINCE WOKE)

Then each of the two Princes ceded the Empire to the other, and His Augustness Ohoke [finally] ceded it to the younger brother His Augustness Woke, saying: "Had not Thine Augustness revealed our names when we dwelt in the house of Shizhimu in Harima, we should never have arrived at being the lords of the Empire. This is quite owing to Thine Augustness's deed. So, though I be the elder brother, do Thine Augustness rule the Empire first,"—and [with these words] he urgently ceded [his claim]. So, being unable to refuse, His Augustness Woke ruled the Empire first.

SECTION CLXVII.—EMPEROR KEN-ZŌ (PART I.—THE OLD WOMAN OKI-ME)

His Augustness Woke-no-ihasu-wake dwelt at the palace of Chika-tsu-Asuka, ²³⁸⁴ and ruled the Empire for eight years. The Heavenly Sovereign wedded the Queen of Naniha, ²³⁸⁵ daughter of the King of Ihaki. ²³⁸⁶ He had no children. At the time when this Heavenly Sovereign was searching for the august bones of the King his father, King Ichinobe, ²³⁸⁷ there came out from the land of Afumi [to the palace] a poor old woman, who said: "The place where the prince's august bones are buried is specially well known to me, ²³⁸⁸ and moreover [his skeleton] can be known by his august teeth." (His august teeth were teeth uneven like a lily.) Then people were set ²³⁸⁹ to dig the ground and search for the august bones; and the bones having been forthwith obtained, an august mausoleum was made on the mountain east of the Moor of Kaya, ²³⁹⁰ and they were interred, and the children of Kara-fukuro ²³⁹¹ were made to guard the august mausoleum. Afterwards the august bones were brought up [to the Capital]. So having returned up [to the Capital, the Heavenly Sovereign] sent for the old woman, praised her for having, without forgetting, kept the place in mind, and conferred upon her the name of the Old Woman Oki-me: ²³⁹² thus did he send for her into the palace, and deign to treat her with deep and wide kindness. So he built a house for the old woman to dwell in dose to the palace, and always sent for her every day. So he hung a bell by the door of the great hall, and always rang it when he wished to call the old woman. So he composed an august Song. That Song said:

"Oh! the far-distant bell tinkles when she has past the moor with its low eulalias and the little valley. Oh! Oki-me must be coming!" ²³⁹³

²³⁸⁴ See Sect. CXXXIII, Note 11.

²³⁸⁵ Naniha no miko. For Naniha see Sect. XLIV, Note 26

²³⁸⁶ Ihaki no miko.

²³⁸⁷ Who had been treacherously slain by the Emperor Yū-riyaku (see Sect. CXLVIII).

²³⁸⁸ I.e., says Motowori, "it is known to me, and to none besides."

²³⁸⁹ The character used is 起, which is more applicable to the raising of troops than to the setting to work of peasants. It seems however here to be used in the latter sense; or perhaps we should consider it to mean that people were got together.

²³⁹⁰ See Sect. CXLVIII, Note 3. Possibly the "mountain east" should be a Proper Name,—Eastern Mountain,—but it is not taken as such by Motowori.

²³⁹¹ See Sect. CXLVIII, Note 1.

²³⁹² I.e., "keeping an eye." q.d., on the place of burial of the Emperor's father. Grammar would lead us to expect the order of the words forming the name to be reversed thus, Mo-oki; but see Motowori's remarks in Vol. XLIII, p. 56.

²³⁹³ This Song is not comprehensible except by reference to the text of the "Chronicles," whose author gives a somewhat varying version of the story. He tells us that, as a support to the infirm old lady, the Emperor had a string or rope stretched as a sort of hand-rest along the way she was obliged to pass in order to reach the Imperial apartments, and that at the end of the rope was a bell whose tinkling notified the Emperor of her approach. The conjectural exclamation which closes the little poem has therefore an obvious sense, which would be wanting if the bell were at the other end, as in the version here given; for the Emperor would not give expression to surprise at her approach, if he had himself just rung for her to come.—"Far-distant" is an imperfect attempt to represent the Pillow-Word momo-dzutafu, which here alludes to the stages along which the old woman may be supposed to be travelling. The valley and the moor overgrown with short grass form an allusion to the way,—long and arduous for her,—which Oki-me had to traverse to reach the Imperial apartments, and they contain possibly a further allusion to her original journey to the capital.

Hereupon the old woman said: "I am very aged, and would fain depart to my native land." So when the Heavenly Sovereign let her depart according to her request, he saw her off and sang, saying:

"Ah Okime! Okime from Afumi! from to-morrow [onwards] wilt [thou] be hidden behind the deep mountains, and alas! not seen!" ²³⁹⁴

²³⁹⁴ The meaning of this Song is quite clear.—The second time the name Oki-me occurs, it might, instead of being as here taken as an exclamation, be made the subject of the sentence, thus: "Oki-me from Afumi will by to-morrow, etc." The words "wilt [thou]," which represent ka of the original Japanese may be taken either as an exclamation properly so-called, or as a sort of rhetorical interrogation whose force is simply exclamatory. The meaning comes to the same in either case, and is literally rendered by the same English words; but according to the latter view, we should have to replace the point of exclamation by a point of interrogation.

SECTION CLXVIII.—EMPEROR KEN-ZŌ (PART II.—HE SLAYS THE BOAR-HERD)

The Heavenly Sovereign searched for the old boar-herd who had seized his august provisions at the time when he first met with adversity and was fleeing; ²³⁹⁵ and, having sought him out, sent for him up [to the Capital], beheaded him in the bed ²³⁹⁶ of the River Asuka, ²³⁹⁷ and cut the knee-tendons of all his kindred. Wherefore down to the present time his descendants, on the day when ²³⁹⁸ they come up to Yamato, always limp of their own accord. So the man's abode had been well seen and divined. ²³⁹⁹ So the place was named Shimesu. ²⁴⁰⁰

²³⁹⁵ See Sect. CXLIX.

²³⁹⁶ Motowori would have us understand the text to mean "in the neighbourhood of the river." There is, however, no difficulty in accepting the author's statement literally, as any one who is acquainted with the broad, stony beds of Japanese rivers will readily admit.

²³⁹⁷ Asuki-gaka. For Asuka see Sect. CXXXIII. Note 11.

²³⁹⁸ I.e., probably "whenever."

²³⁹⁹ I.e., "discovered by augury," or else simply "found and pointed out,"—by whom does not appear.

²⁴⁰⁰ The real etymology of this name is obscure, but the author's intention is to connect it with the "dividing" or "pointing out" mentioned in the preceding sentence, which is given phonetically as [mi] shimeki.

SECTION CLXIX.—EMPEROR KEN-ZŌ (PART III.—THE EMPEROR YŪ-RIYAKU'S MAUSOLEUM IS DISFIGURED)

The Heavenly Sovereign, deeply hating the Heavenly Sovereign Oho-hatsuse, who had slain the King his father, wished to be revenged on his spirit. ²⁴⁰¹ So when wishing to destroy the august mausoleum of the Heavenly Sovereign Oho-hatsuse, he [was about to] send people [to execute this design], his elder brother, His Augustness Ohoke, addressed' him, saying: "To demolish this august mausoleum thou shouldst not send other people. None but myself shall go, and I will demolish it according to the Heavenly Sovereign's august heart. ²⁴⁰² Then the Heavenly Sovereign commanded: "Make thy progress, then, according to thy decree," ²⁴⁰³ Wherefore His Augustness Ohoke, having proceeded down himself, slightly excavated the side of the august mausoleum, and returned up [to the capital], and reported that he had dug up and demolished it. Then the Heavenly Sovereign, astonished at the quickness of his return up, asked how he had demolished it. He replied, saying: "I slightly excavated the earth at the side of the august mausoleum." The Heavenly Sovereign said: "Wishing to be revenged on the enemy, of the King our father, I had counted on. the complete demolition of the mausoleum, Why hast thou [only] slightly excavated it?" He replied, saying: "The reason why I did so was that the wish to be revenged on the spirit of the foe of the King our father is truly just. Nevertheless the Heavenly Sovereign Oho-hatsuse, though he were our father's foe, was still our uncle, and moreover was an Heavenly Sovereign who ruled the Empire. So if we now, simply from the consideration of his having been our father's enemy, were completely to demolish the mausoleum of an Heavenly Sovereign who ruled the Empire, after-generations would surely revile us. Meanwhile the wrongs of the King our father must not be unrevenge. So I slightly excavated the side of the mausoleum. This insult will quite suffice as a token to future ages." On his thus addressing him, the Heavenly Sovereign said: "This also is very just, Be it as thou sayest."

²⁴⁰¹ 霊, read ni tama or tamashihi. We might also translate it by the word "ghost."

²⁴⁰² The respectful character 奏 is used for this word, and again below we have the First Personal Pronoun represented by 僕, "servant."

²⁴⁰³ This sentence ends in the original with the characters 以出參, which it is not necessary to render into English. They imply that the speaker will come back, and report on what he has done.

SECTION CLXX.—EMPEROR KEN-ZŌ (PART IV.—HIS AGE AND PLACE OF BURIAL)

So the Heavenly Sovereign died, and His Augustness Ohoke ruled the succession of Heaven's sun. ²⁴⁰⁴ The Heavenly Sovereign's august years were thirty-eight years. His august mausoleum is on the mound of Ihatsuki at Katawoka. ²⁴⁰⁵

²⁴⁰⁴ See Sect. XXXII, Note 27.

²⁴⁰⁵ For Katawoka see Sect. LX, Note 29. Iha-tsuki probably means "rockplatter," and seems to have been the name of a little plateau.

SECTION CLXXI.—EMPEROR NIN-KEN²⁴⁰⁶

His Augustness Ohoke dwelt at the palace of Hirataka at Isono-kami, and ruled the Empire. The Heavenly Sovereign wedded Kasuga-no-oho-iratsume, the august daughter of the Heavenly Sovereign Oho-hatsuse-no-waka-take, and begot august children: Takaki-no-iratsume; next Takara-no-iratsume; next Kasubi-no-iratsume; next Tashiraka-no-iratsume; next His Grandeur Wo-hatsuse-no-waka-sazaki; next Prince Ma-waka. The child born to him by his next wife Naka-no-waku-go-no-iratsume, daughter of the Grandee Hitsuma (?) of Wani, was: Kasuga-no-yamada-no-iratsume. The august children of this Heavenly Monarch numbered seven altogether. Of these His Augustness Wo-hatsuse-no-waka-sazaki [was he who afterwards] ruled the Empire.

²⁴⁰⁶ For the discontinuance of explanatory foot-notes in this concluding portion of the translation see Translator's Introduction, Sect. II. near the top of page xv.

SECTION CLXXII—EMPEROR MU-RETSU

His Grandeur Wo-hatsuse-no-waka-sazaki dwelt in the palace of Namiki at Hatsuse, and ruled the Empire for eight years. This Heavenly Monarch had no august children. So the Wo-hatsuse Tribe was established as his august proxy. His august mausoleum is on the mound of Ihatsuki at Karawoka. On the death of this Heavenly Monarch there was no prince to inherit the Empire, So His Augustness Ohodo, the fifth descendant of the Heavenly Monarch Homuda, was sent for down to the land of Afumi, and married to her Augustness Tashiraka, and presented with the Empire.

SECTION CLXXIII.—EMPEROR KEI-TAI

His Augustness Ohodo dwelt in the Palace of Tamaho at Ihare, and ruled the Empire. The (two) august children born to this Heavenly Monarch by Waka-hime, ancestress of the Dukes of Miwo, were: Oho-iratsuko, next Idzumo-no-iratsume. The (two) august children born to him by his next wife, Meko-no-iratsume, sister of the Chieftain Ofushi, ancestor of the Chieftains of Wohari, were: His Augustness Hiro-kuni-oshi-taka-kana-hi; next His Augustness Take-wo-hiro-kuni-oshi-tate. The (one) august child born to him by his next wife (the Great Empress) Her Augustness Tashiraka, the august daughter of the Heavenly Monarch Ohoke, was: His Augustness Ame-kuni-oshi-haruki-hiro-niha. CHRONOLOGY OF SOVEREIGNS MENTIONED IN THE KOJIKI AND NIHONGI

THE HITHERTO ACCEPTED CHRONOLOGY OF THE EARLY JAPANESE SOVEREIGNS MENTIONED IN THE "RECORDS OF ANCIENT MATTERS" ("KO-JI-KI") AND IN THE "CHRONICLES OF JAPAN" ("NI-HONGI").

[This "Accepted Chronology" is contained in the first three columns of figures, whereof the first two, giving the corresponding dates according to the European reckoning are transcribed from some Comparative Chronological Tables by Mr. Ernest Satow, printed for private distribution in 1874. The ages of the monarchs in the third column are from "The Digest of the Imperial Pedigree," a work published by the Imperial Japanese Government in 1877, and therefore carrying with it the weight of authority. It might perhaps be too much to say that even its decisions are universally bowed to by the native literati, but the differences between various writers are all slight, and excepting on points that affect only a very few years, the chronology contained in the first three columns may justly be styled the "Accepted Chronology" both as far as natives and as far as foreigners are concerned. It will be seen that it is founded in the main on the statements contained in the "Chronicles of Japan," though sometimes differing therefrom as well as from the "Records." The fourth column contains the ages of the monarchs according to the "Records" and the fifth their ages according to the "Chronicles." The portion printed in italics, and including a little over a thousand years, is that which has been shown in Section V of the Translator's Introduction to be undeserving of credence.
